NEGRO SHOT TO DEATH AT NAPANEE STATION

EMPLOYEE OF THE MIGHTY HAAG CIRCUS,

MAN WHO DID SHOOTING STILL AT LARGE

HIS DESCRIPTION.

W. T. Daniels, aged 35 years, weight 180 lbs., height 9 or 10 inches, square shouldered, smooth shaven, high cheek bone, shabbily dressed, may be wearing soft felt hat.

THE TRAGEDY.

The story of the tragedy in concise form is as follows:
Monday evening shortly after nine o'clock, at the time the employees of the Mighty Haag Circus were loading their cars, the men were indulging in to a considerable extent. The colored man, Charles Smythe, or known among the circus hands as "Dad," was in the Queen's Hotel, at mixed up with a party of foreigners, who assaulted him and threw him the hotel. This so enraged the negro that he rushed over to where the men were loading the cars, asking for a loan of a knife, that he might and carve up "the white devil" who had hit him. His quest for a knife unsuccessful, and he returned to the hotel. Finding the doors shut at him he proceeded to smash in one of the windows. The proprietor of the hotel opened the door and asked the enraged man what he was doing what he wanted. The colored man's reply was that he wanted to "get" man who had hit him. The proprietor replied that those who had look had left the hotel. In the meantime "Dad" had stepped inside the door was proceeding to leave the hotel by the exit at the north. Evidently with passion the colored man did not seem to know or care what he did attacked one of the performers of the show who was leaving the hotel time. The attacked man was evidently scared because he started to towards the place where the cars were being loaded, closely followed by enraged negro. A foreman of one of the gangs, a man who had only one and the hand of that badly crippled, stepped between the pursuer and pursued and ordered the colored man to go back to his work, or else go to car. The enraged negro then turned his attention to the foreman and ceeded to beat him up. This man, owing to his crippled condition, could defend himself and tried to back away but was closely followed by the man who was beating him all the time. After the foreman had backed a considerable distance, he saw that something had to be done, and upon some of the other circus men to help him. Two other colored men a race to help their boss, but before they could reach him, the horse boy parade marshal, a man known among the circus hands as "Dutch," or named, W. T. Daniels, appeared on the scene and before anyone could fire, fired four shots from a revolver at the apparently crazed negro. The shots took effect, one in one of his arms near the shoulder, and the in the head, entering just near the ear on the right side. This shot evidently killed the negro immediately, as he dropped to the ground dead. Flour his revolver, "Dutch" was heard to remark, "That's the way we do in Texas, and I am from Texas, and if any other son-of-a-bitch wants anything let step out and I will give it to him." The large crowd of citizens standing around were spell bound with horror and some little time elapsed before action was taken. In the meantime "Dutch" was seen to enter the hotel after buying a drink left by the back door, and has not been seen since. The police was telephoned for and in a short time a search for the man did the shooting was in progress, but no trace of him could be found. Coroner was notified and the body of the dead man was removed to City & Mung's undertaking rooms.

THE INQUEST.

Tuesday afternoon at 1:30 p.m., a coroner's jury was convened for the purpose of inquiring into the death of Charles Smythe, and fixing the responsibility upon the person or persons responsible for the same.

Coroner G. H. Cowan, M.D., presided.

D. H. Preston, K.C., acting Crown Attorney.

The jury was composed of the following citizens: E. W. Smith, J. N.

The colored man had no weapon tried to get a knife for the purpose of killing Canadians. Did not he was so very drunk, but seem to be crazy. There had been no trouble between deceased and Daniels. LIBERAL MEETING IN TOWN HALL, NAPANEE, ON SATURDAY,
JUNE 6TH, 2 P.M.

Tuesday afternoon at 1.30 p.m., a coroner's jury was convened for the purpose of inquiring into the death of Charles Smythe, and fixing the responsibility upon the person or persons responsible for the same.

Coroner G. H. Cowan, M.D., presided.
D. H. Preston, K.C., acting Crown Attorney.

The jury was composed of the following citizens: F. W. Smith, J. N.
Osborne, Wm. Finkle, R. B. Allen, A.
S. Kimmerly, A. McGregor, F. H.
Carson, V. Koubier and F. J. Roblin.
Mr. John F. VanKoughnet, County High Constable, made a declaration in reference to the summoning of the jury and the serving of the subpoenas on the witnesses required.

Mr. Fred Delvy, lot superintendent for the circus was the first witness called.

Deceased had been one of the circus train hands but witness did not know his name any more than he was called "Dad" by the circus employees, and had only been with the show since March, 1914. The last time witness saw him was just before he was shot.
The shooting took place just at the edge of the road on the south side of the G.T.R., yards, and at the time deceased was assaulting witness. As to what led to the attack witness did not know, it appeared to him that the man was absolutely crazy. Previous to attack there had been an argument going on at the far end of the train between some young lad and his mother. The boy was drunk and his mother wanted to get him home.

Witness went to see what trouble was and found "Dad" in the company.
Told him to go back to his work and the reply given was, yes sir. Saw that "Dad" had been drinking but not enough to prevent him from doing his work. This was about three-quarters of an hour before the shooting took place. Next time he saw him was when loading third car, he was in front of hotel and was smashing window with fists. "Dad" then came running over to him and asked for a knife, using very bad language against the Canadians, at the same time saying they had hit him and he was going to kill them all. Witness told "Dad" he had better go to bed, but he would not and repeated that he would go back and kill them all.

"Dad" went back to the hotel and finding all the doors closed against him started breaking the windows.
Then he got into the hotel some way and the next witness saw was a young fellow knocked out of the hotel door.
"Dad" came after him and the young fellow ran towards place where witness was, calling for assistance. Witness told "Dad" to stop, and it was then that he was attacked. He could not defend himself very well as he had only one arm, and a broken finger on the hand of that arm. He kept backing away, at the same time taking most of punishment on the top of his head. He called to the train hands to come and get his assailant.
Just about the time they got there the shots were fired. The first shot was fired over witness' head, and he did not see who fired it. Did not know how many shots were fired but think there were three or four. When asked if he knew who did the shooting witness replied that it was the boss hostler, commonly known among the circus hands as "Dutch," his name being W. T. Daniels. After the shooting "Dutch" turned to him and said "I killed him to keep him from killing you," and made some remark about the way they did it in Texas.

Witness said interference was necessary for his safety. He did not think "Dad" knew who he was, because if he did he would not have hit him.

CENTREVILLE.

A gloom has been cast over Centreville by the deaths of two of our most esteemed residents, Miss Susannah McGill, living a short distance from here, died on Tuesday. She had been ill some time and had every available comfort and necessity, but yet the dreadful hour came at last. Her funeral on, on Thursday, was largely attended. Another sad death occurred at Kingston on Thursday, when Mortimer Lochhead passed suddenly away. He had gone down a week previous to his death to get treatment. He will be greatly missed. Charles Whalen made a hurried call to his old home here on Sunday last. Henry Curl has a new automobile. Edward Jarvis had a raising bee on Thursday, erecting a new shed. Miss Annie Ingoldsby, Kingston, and friend, Miss Manners, Westport, are guests of Mrs. Charles Ingoldsby.

MONTREAL, June 2. — Now the first burst of excitement and at the loss of life through the single of the C.P.R. steamship Empress of Ireland has partially spent itself the general public is settling down await the Government enquiry before giving judgment as to the responsibility for the frightful accident an unhappy controversy between commanders of the two vessel involved is looming large on the horizon. Doubtless each of them badly over the event itself, but present it seems to be a case of "letting the other fellow" and shift
the blame, as far as possible.

While the tragedy is written deeply on the hearts of thousands never to be erased in life, the men who stand out conspicuously before all the world as possibly more responsible for it are in a conflict over it. Captain Kendalla of the Empress of Ireland tells the story at Rimouski that the captain of the collier Storstad might have vented loss of life if he had kept Storstad's nose in the gap she in the Empress' side. Captain Andersen, of the Storstad, in interview this city, says he did try to do but the Empress "was going at speed ahead" and drew away in manner that the bow of the Storstad was forced out of the hole.

Captain Kendall's evidence, brief, is to the effect that the captain of the Storstad was at fault, first proceeding ahead when the Empress of Ireland had signalled that she
"under way, but is stopped and no way on her," and second in drawing out from the gap she had in the Empress' side. Captain Kendall is backed up by his chief engineer, William Simpson, an Irishman, and by James Rankin, a marine engineer, both of whom state that the collier should have kept her nose in the hole and held up the Empress long enough to allow the crew to launch the boats and get the people off in safety.

Captain Andersen takes quite a different view of the Empress' actions just prior to the fatal crash of the Storstad. He says the Empress was going fast ahead, and it was possible after the collision to keep the vessel's bow in the rent she made because the Empress was going fast.

As to statements made by Captain Kendall and others to the effect that the Storstad did comparatively little towards using its boats to save the Empress, Captain Lange, agent for Storstad, says the collier, at great risk to itself, did everything possible to save the Empress; people and cargo on board 350. Third Officer Sax-ton of the Storstad, who was on the bridge at the time, corroborated this.
Storstad's crew seems inclined so what freely to lay blame on the Empress for the accident.

The truth, it is hoped, will

TRIED TO SAVE SHIP.

Engineers Worked Until Their Engines Failed Them.

TORONTO, June 2.—Following the collision of the Empress of Ireland and the collier, there was desperate effort in the engine room to save the ship, and the engineers and assistants kept the engines only when human power was of no avail because the steam had failed and the gigantic engines were rendered useless. The story told by Chief Engineer W. Sampson to his son of that last fight in the engine room to obey the captain's orders and save the ship and the 1,400 souls aboard, was told here yesterday by the engineer's son, Mr. J. E. Sampson of this city, as heard from his father in Montreal on Sunday.

Held up by two men, Engineer Sampson worked with the starting apparatus, which, because of the list of the boat, was over his head instead of at his side. In this position, really lying on his back in the hands of his assistants, the engineer worked the machinery until the steam failed and the big engines failed to respond. The telegraphic communication with the bridge and the captain continued its signals. The order came to beach her, and Sampson put on all steam, but in a moment all steam was no steam and the engines kicked once or twice and quit.

Obedient the great code of marine men, the rules of the Board of Trade, the engineer wired back to the captain: "No steam, the engines are gone." Back came the message from the bridge, the usual signal, but carried a message of death "Finished with the engines."

Then the lights went out and Chief Engineer Sampson gave his last order in the engine-room of the Empress, when he told his men to get out. "We climbed the ladder on the side which was really the ceiling now," said Engineer Sampson, "like the flies on a wall."

Duke at Kingston.

KINGSTON, June 2.—H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught, accompanied by the Duchess of Connaught and Princess Patricia, is paying his fifth visit to Kingston to-day, since taking over office. He was given a civic welcome in MacDonald Park, and will later in the day inspect the cadets of the Royal Military College and the new dormitories and gun sheds. The duke has stated that he will attend the closing exercises of the military college on June 24.

The truth, it is hoped, will be drawn by the official enquiry, which is announced to open on June 9 in Quebec City. A preliminary enquiry begun yesterday in Montreal by Captain Lindsay, wreck commissioner, is privately securing for the government information to be used by the investigating board. This will be composed of two judges of the Canadian Admiralty Court, appointed by the Dominion Government, and one representative of the British Admiralty, appointed by the Imperial Government.

Log Book Recovered.

QUEBEC, June 2.—Captain Pouliot of the Government steamer Lady Evelyn, recovered the Empress log book late Friday night, coasting for bodies.

The book is not damaged. It is found in a water tight metal box is supposed that the first of whose body was identified her Monday, leaped with it from the ship boat, and that when he dropped it loosened his grip from the leaving it to drift.

"DON'T BLAME UNDERLIN

Get the Guilty Persons, Says South Wales Premier.

LONDON, June 2.—A despatch The Daily Telegraph from Sydney, N.S.W., says that the Premier, W. A. Holman, in announcing a message of sympathy in the loss of the Empress of Ireland, made the following statement:

"I expect that the enquiry will in the condemnation of some unfortunate second mate or seaman. I will be no safety for the travelling public until the directors of the companies which send 1,500 people in a ship capable of being destroyed in 15 minutes, are put on trial for accessories to manslaughter. I think that the Canadian Government deal with the calamity in that I am not saying who is innocent who is guilty, but if the disaster was due to a human failing, the people who make money by gambling human lives ought to be punished."

Fragment of Cloth In Irving's Tells Mute Story.

QUEBEC, June 2.—The corps Laurence Irving, the actor, was found upon the west shore of the Lawrence, below Rimouski, Sunday night, and the information was sent to the C.P.R. officials here yesterday morning. His face was badly bruised and hardly recognizable, but on his finger was a signet ring with the initials "L.I." He had a piece of a man's nightdress in his dead grip, it was evidently Mrs. Irving's, cause when last seen alive, the distinguished actor was making a desperate effort to save her life. It thought that in his brave effort to save her life he lost his own.

A few bodies have been taken straight from Rimouski to Montreal. The body of Leonard Palmer, English journalist, was identified yesterday.

Drowning Not Cause of Death in Majority of Cases.

Results of Investigation by Embalmers and Undertakers at Quebec Show That Nine-Tenths Were Killed by Injuries Received During Collision — Efforts Will Be Made to Raise Liner.

QUEBEC, June 2.—More than nine-tenths of the victims of the Empress of Ireland disaster whose bodies have been recovered, were not drowned; they were killed, in most cases instantly, by injuries received either when the collision occurred or subsequently by falling wreckage and debris. This statement, made last night by the officials at the mortuary pier, following investigation by the embalmers and undertakers, accounts for the large number of dead bodies which survivors have repeatedly maintained were floating in the water all about them. "There is no doubt that nearly all were killed by injuries received before they were cast into the water at all," said Undertaker Craig of Toronto, in confirming the announcements.

While no official statement has yet issued from the Canadian Pacific Co., marine men here say that there is no doubt that efforts will be made to raise the foundered Empress. She is lying at the bottom on her side, in 180 feet of water at full tide. Her injuries are very extensive, according to the statements of those of her crew who manned the boat immediately lowered after the collision to ascertain the damage done. Several wrecking corporations have already tendered for the work of raising the liner.

On two of the bodies recovered gold and securities, to the amount of $23,000, were found. Mr. B. Anderson of London, Eng., had three drafts netting $14,000, and $1,000 in gold in a belt strapped round his body. Miss Ruth Morton of Fernie, B.C., had securities for $8,000 on her person.

Nightfall found eighty-nine bodies not yet identified. For two days the steady stream of friends and relatives of the lost have passed up and down, in and out, among the sleeping dead. There remain four score of "unknown." Death, the great leveler, has laid them side by side, all equal now. Summoned in the night to the embrace of the relentless deep, they had not even their clothing by which to aid recognition. No barrier separates the humble steerage toiler from the favored scion of wealth and position. Together they must sleep, in nameless kindness, in one great grave, under one memorial monument.

Under the personal direction of his Honor Sir Francois Langellier, Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, preparations for the memorial service and the burial of the unidentified dead are now proceeding. The band of H.M.S. Essex, the officers and crew of which have already shared largely in the tribute of service, will escort the remains to their last resting place.

Many miniature caskets still rest upon the mortuary bier. Few of "the babies" have been identified. The toll of children has been heavy.

All day the work of identification, now hourly growing more difficult, has gone on slowly. In some cases, certainty has given place to conjecture. In others dual claimants have urged recognition of the one body. Scores of telegraphic inquiries have

Many miniature caskets still rest upon the mortuary bier. Few of "the babies" have been identified. The tol of children has been heavy.

All day the work of identification, now hourly growing more difficult, has gone on slowly. In some cases, certainty has given place to conjecture. In others dual claimants have urged recognition of the one body. Scores of telegraphic inquiries have had to be laid aside unanswered.

Woman Survivor Demented.
QUEBEC, June 2.—Word was received from Rimouski yesterday afternoon that a woman, evidently a survivor of the wreck, had been found wandering around naked near there. Apparently she was a Swede, but was quite insane and unable to say anything which would lead to her identifica- tion.

Beyond Hope of Salvage.
QUEBEC, June 2. — Commander Tweedie of H.M.S. Essex, which is helping in the search for bodies, is of the opinion that the Empress of Ireland is beyond all hope of salvage. Tis opinion is, of course, based on conjecture from a description of the damage done to the liner by the col- lier. He thinks that the hull will have to be blown up by dynamite so that it may not become a danger to navigation. The divers of the Essex have been offered to the Canadian Pacific officials if their services are required.

Treasure on Board Empress.
QUEBEC, June 2. — Two million dollars in Cobalt silver are stated to be in the strong room of the sunken Empress. Such was the word received in Quebec yesterday morning. Wires from New York also indicate a valuable consignment on board, and express anxiety that the wreck be salvaged at the earliest possible moment.

BECKER HAS A YEAR.

Legal Proceedings To Appeal Case May Take That Time.

NEW YORK, June 2.—It is announced that a notice appeal in the case of Charles Becker, sentenced to death for the Rosenthal murder, will be filed within a few days. This notice, of course, automatically stays execution so that Becker will not have to die during the week beginning with July 6. The Becker lawyers have stated that they would be ready to argue the case before the Court of Appeals at the beginning of the fall term in October. It is believed, however, that it will be a year before the court can act on the case.

In the meantime Becker is lodged in a death cell at Sing Sing prison.

President Cables Sympathy.
WASHINGTON, June 2.—President Wilson yesterday sent a message of condolence to King George on the sinking of the Empress of Ireland in the St. Lawrence river: "I beg of Your Majesty," cabled President Wilson, "to accept my deepest sympathy in the appalling catastrophe to the steamship Empress of Ireland, which has brought bereavement to so many English homes."

Secretary Bryan instructed American Ambassador Page in London to call at the British Foreign Office and express this Government's condolence and his own in the disaster which overtook the British vessel.

VANCOUVER, June 2.—That the Marajahs of two of the most important Indian provinces be requested to call on the Viceroy to demand in turn that he shall appeal to the Imperial Government and to the Government of Canada to secure entry of the Hindus aboard the Komagata Maru, now in this port, was a resolution passed at a meeting of East Indians, when heavy subscriptions were made for their brethren on board the steamer. The threat was added that much unrest would be fomented in India if the party are not allowed to land.

The situation has become rather aggravated because 640 Chinese arrived on the Empress of Russia Saturday and were admitted on payment of $500 head tax each. Boards of inquiry in the individual cases of the Hindus convened yesterday, and will probably last all week.

TO GUARANTEE BONDS.
Government Will Back Issue Amounting to $16,000,000.

OTTAWA, June 2. — The Government gave notice of a resolution late last evening, which will be moved in the House to guarantee the bonds of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway to the extent of three-quarters of the completion of the mountain section of the line. This will amount to $16,000,000. The estimate of the company is that it will take about $20,000,000 to complete the section, but there is interest also to be provided for.

For this the Government accepts as security a mortgage on the western division and on the Lake Superior branch subject to all existing prior mortgages thereon.

The Government will not be required to implement the additional bonds so guaranteed, and will not be required to pay interest without recourse on the bonds so guaranteed.

The amount of the bonds so guaranteed will include a sufficient sum to provide for interest thereon for three years after completion.

It was stated on behalf of the Government last evening that the obligation of the Government to guaranteed bonds for three-quarters of the cost of the mountain section was clear, but on the other hand the obligation of the company to give a first mortgage securing all such bonds was equally clear.

Conflicting legal opinions as to the liability of the Government were put forward on each side, but eventually a compromise was arrived at on the basis of the arrangement detailed above.

There is talk of winding up the business of the House by Saturday, with prorogation on Monday. At the outside the House will adjourn a week from Wednesday. Farmers' Bank legislation will come up to-day.

DISHES OF THE PAST

ANCIENT COOKS MAKE OUR CHEFS LOOK SMALL.

The Wonderful Feast of Lucullus at Which Six Maidens, Dressed as Nymphs, Floated in Boats on a Lake of Wine Is Still Unparalleled in Our Age of Vaunted Magnificence.

In this era of the high cost of living it is interesting to turn backward the pages of history and see what some of the world-peoples of the past placed on their tables.

We know that bread was the earliest cooked food. Sometimes it was made of flour produced by crushing acorns, but more often it was merely the crude mixture of Egypt called "kuscoussoo," and consisted of flour and water cooked together in a basket over boiling water.

The fact that though the children of Israel had been mere slaves in Pharaoh's land they were always pining for the fleshpots of Egypt speaks pretty well for the Egyptian food. The cabbage was one of the favorite foods and was so highly esteemed that it became an object of worship.

The cookery of ancient Greece was very simple, although at one time the Athenians knew 72 ways of making bread. The Athenians were criticised by their Roman neighbors for their frugal fare, and to "live like an Athenian" was a term of reproach, a contemptuous way of telling a person he was stingy. In Sparta abstemiousness was carried still further, and a traveler who had tasted the "black broth of Sparta" said he could understand why the Spartans were so fearless of death, since any one in his senses would rather die than continue to live on such execrable food.

The Greeks, nevertheless, raised cooking to a fine art. In a fragment of an old Greek comedy a cook is introduced who boasts of cooking a fish so deliciously that it returned admiring glances from the frying pan. At any rate, at the time that Greece was conquered by Rome the Grecian cooks were considered among the most valuable plunder carried back to the Eternal City.

Though the Romans captured the Grecian cooks the simple cookery of that country was poorly suited to the taste of the conquerors. The time when "a consul could dine on a roasted turnip" soon passed, and the extravagance and gluttony of ancient Rome have never been equalled in the world's history. Some of the Romans were as cruel as they were gluttonous. To give fowls a more excellent flavor Pollio had them fattened on the flesh of his slaves.

Lucullus once gave a dinner under a wonderful circular tent constructed for the occasion. A lake of wine occupied the centre and six maidens, dressed as nymphs, floated on the lake in gilded boats, serving the wine from golden ladles. Eighteen hundred kinds of meat, fish, and vegetables were served at this banquet, which lasted 40 hours. A small dinner which this famous epicure served for Caesar, Pompey, and himself cost $5,000; but even this extravagance was surpassed by Vitellius, whose daily marketing averaged $15,000. At one of his banquets 2,000 of the rarest fish and 7,000 of the most curious birds were placed before his guests. In four months he spent over $20,000,000 for his table.

The more costly the dish the more did it appeal to the high liver of an-

FAMOUS DIAMONDS.

The Cullinan In the Rough Weighed One and One-third Pounds.

Until 1905 the largest diamond known was the Excelsior, found in 1803 at Jagersfontein by a native while loading a truck. It weighed 973 carats and was cut ultimately into ten stones weighing from thirteen to sixty-eight carats. All previous discoveries were surpassed in 1905 by the finding of a stone weighing 3,025½ carats, or one and a third pounds, in the Premier mine in the Transvaal.

The Transvaal government bought this stone and presented it to King Edward, it having become known as the Cullinan diamond. In 1908 it was sent to Amsterdam and there cut into nine large stones and a number of small ones. The largest one weighed 510½ carats and is the largest brilliant in existence. All are of the finest quality and flawless.

The Kohinoor in its earliest known state weighed 186½ carats, but was later cut to 106.

Other famous diamonds, some from Brazil, some from India or Borneo, others from Kimberley, are the Star of the South, weighing 254½ carats; the Regent or Pitt diamond, weighing 136 carats after several cuttings; the Daryal-nur, weighing 186 carats, in the possession of the Shah of Persia; the Tiffany, weighing 125½ carats; the Victoria, weighing 180 carats and cut from a stone weighing 457 carats.—Exchange.

WINNING HAPPINESS.

Get on Good Terms With Yourself and Everything About You.

Happiness can never come from the outside to the inside unless happiness already exists in the inside. We become happy because there are certain elements within us that respond immediately to the things that make up happiness.

To be thoroughly happy you must be on good terms with yourself.

Also it means that you have fathomed the mystery of happiness in every growing thing about you. A man that is not on good terms with the trees and flowers and birds and houses and the scores of other gifts of nature can never be upon good terms with himself. For nature, though silent in its expression, speaks truths more wondrous than the expressed truths of men.

To be thoroughly happy you must be on good terms with everything about you.

Did you ever look up into the sky and ask yourself whether or not you were on good terms with the stars, with the planets—with the moon? And during the day, with the clouds and the marvelous sun that so greatly affect your disposition, as these things do affect the dispositions of every one?

To be thoroughly happy you must make the wonderful truths and expressions of nature your mental companions.

It is impossible for you to be upon good terms with all people unless you fall in alignment with their sympathies and with their viewpoints. It is impossible for you to bring out the best that is within unless you use as a basic standing a perfect equality of terms.—Toledo Times.

ANCIENT MEDICAL HUMOR.

Specimens From the Rome of Nearly Twenty Centuries Ago.

That there was no lack of medical humor in the classic days of Rome is made sure by the ancient epigrams of Martial of nearly 2,000 years ago. The London Lancet shows that the poet bore a grudge against the specialists of his day, for it seems they had this variety of practitioners then and poked fun at the oculists and at the surgeons who indulged in clinical teaching. Of the latter he has a patient complain in good Latin, and this complaint has

ACUTE APPENDICITIS.

It Is Dangerous Only When There Is Delay in Operating.

"Acute appendicitis calls for immediate surgery," says Dr. Wesley C. Vincent, instructor in surgery at New York Postgraduate Medical School and Hospital. Dr. Vincent insisted there was no medical treatment of acute appendicitis and that the only following operation was always to delay, the surgeon being called when too late.

"The percentage of mortality in operations for acute appendicitis taken in the early stages of the inflammation is shown by hospital statistics to be very low. It is practically . . . The mortality in medically treated cases that are allowed to get to gangrene and rupture with peritonitis is practically 100 per cent, while late surgery in such cases is comparatively few."

Appendicitis is common among children between five and fifteen years of age. There is no particular food that can be singled out as especially liable to cause it unless possibly fruits containing small pits or seeds. Delay is dangerous in children than in adults. The symptoms described by Dr. J.

In old houses the boards and joists forming the floors are often in a somewhat unstable condition. Many floors are permanently bent with the traffic of generations. Others are still undergoing the warping process. It is easy to imagine a floor which is in a perfectly ripe condition for the production of ghostly sounds.

During the daytime the timbers get bent with the weight of the various inmates of the house walking to and fro, but the noise and bustle of the day drowns the starting and creaking which goes on until the floor has recovered its natural position, as it is bound to do in time, wood being of an elastic nature.

When, however, the stillness of night comes on, these little intermittent movements may become magnified into mysterious footsteps, according to the imagination of the hearer. I myself live in a house the landing of which exactly illustrates my argument. Some hours after all are in bed the sound of one stealthily creeping along the landing is heard—loud enough to startle a light sleeper into wakefulness. "Who's that?" has often been the exclamation, but by good sense the natural explanation has as often been accepted.—London Times.

Didn't Need the Hoe.

Some time ago a hobo meekly tapped on the back door of a suburban home and asked for something to eat. The good housewife responded that she would feed him on the back step along with Fido provided he was willing to earn the meal by cleaning out the gutter.

The tramp agreed, and when he had eaten his way through several sandwiches the housewife came out with a reliable looking hoe.

"You needn't have gone to that trouble, madam," said the hobo. "I never use a hoe in cleaning out a gutter."

"Never use a hoe?" said the woman. "What do you use, then, a shovel?"

"No, madam," sweetly replied the hobo, starting for the back gate. "My method is to pray for rain."—Boston Advertiser.

"It wouldn't take so many menu cards to carry us through at dinner," said the head waiter, "if people didn't scribble so many notes on them and make them unfit for use. Memoranda of all kinds are jotted down on these cards during a meal. Arithmetical puzzles are solved, the particulars of business deals are worked out, financial problems are wrestled with, sonnets are composed, and social engagements are made and broken. The fact is I have seen about everything written on a menu card except a popular novel, and no doubt I've found the plots of some of them."—New York Times.

of nearly 2,000 years ago. The London Lancet shows that the poet bore a grudge against the specialists of his day, for it seems they had this variety of practitioners then and poked fun at the oculists and at the surgeons who indulged in clinical teaching. Of the latter he has a patient complain in good Latin, and this complaint has been made over into current English: I lay ill, but soon Symmachus sought me With a class of a hundred young men, Whose hundred cold paws have brought me The fever I lacked till then.

The Journal of the American Medical association calling attention to the medical ways of the ancient city notes that diseases due to luxurious habits had multiplied greatly in Rome. What was called gout—that is, pains and aches in joints and muscles and the vague conditions that we now call rheumatism—had also greatly increased. Pliny, who was an older contemporary of Martial, says, "Gout used to be an extremely rare disease, not in the times of our fathers and grandfathers only, but even within my own memory." Although the gouty were usually rich and of luxurious habits, some of them evidently were not good pay. An evidence of this is thus given: Diodorus, while he sues in court, On gouty feet can stand, But when the lawyer's bill is brought The gout sets fast his hand.

Masked Women.

Upper class Swabill women wear curious masks, which are made of leather and beads on a wooden frame. The mask is derived from the traditional usage of Moslem women, who must keep their faces covered in the presence of men. For several centuries Arab traders have frequented this east African coast, and to their influence are due most of the civilized customs found today among the natives of the district. The clothing worn by these prosperous dames is of silk, their shoes are partly of silver, and they wear much silver jewelry. The Moslems in Zanzibar, by the way, are less fanatically strict about religious usages than their brethren in Morocco and Turkey.—Wide World Magazine.

Might as Well Have Seen Him.

Awakening with a bad headache the morning after a banquet, a suburban dentist mused, not unpleasantly, on his last evening's spree. But suddenly his wife appeared and, advancing to his bedside, shouted hysterically:

"You wretch! What will the neighbors say at your coming home drunk last night?"

"But, my dear, nobody saw me," the dentist protested.

"Nobody saw you! What if nobody did see you? You know well enough they all heard the way I carried on when you got back."—New York Tribune.

self cost $5,000; but even this extravagance was surpassed by Vitellius, whose daily marketing averaged $15,000. At one of his banquets 2,000 of the rarest fish and 7,000 of the most curious birds were placed before his guests. In four months he spent over $20,000,000 for his table.

The more costly the dish the more did it appeal to the high liver of ancient Rome. Tongues of nightingales, brains of peacock, roe of the rarest fish, and brains of humming birds were used at their feasts. Dormice, cuttlefish, and hedgehogs were considered delicacies, especially when served with a sauce made from honey, rue, pepper, assafoetida, and an oil made of decomposed fish.

A mixture of courtly ceremony and barbaric manners marked the table customs of the middle ages. Forks were not used till the 17th century. They were brought to England from Italy and were not popular for some time. Englishmen spurned the use of the fork as being unmanly, and spoons and knives were considered equally unnecessary, for soup could be swallowed from the bowl, and the thumb was a perfectly good tool to use in buttering one's bread.

The common people ate their food from wooden trenches or boards, but the baron and his guests used trenchers made of pewter or precious metal. Earthenware plates were not in common use till the 17th century. After the feast an alms dish was brought and the chaplain received the broken bits of bread and meat for the poor under the direction of the almoner.

There was great extravagance. At a feast given by Edward IV. in 1476, 62 cooks were employed, and among the things which went to make this "royal feed" were beeves cooked whole, mutton, antelope, venison and 24 kinds of birds, including both tame and wild ones. Among the birds mentioned were larks, pigeons, pheasants, and peacocks.

In Chaucer's time there was especial extravagance at court. Richard, who was called "the best and royalist viander of all Christian Kings," occupied the throne, and as 10,000 persons were daily fed from his kitchen it required the killing of 500 sheep, 28 oxen, and fish, game and poultry in prodigious numbers for each meal.

When Puritanism came in the swans, boars' heads and peacocks vanished, as did the rich pastries.

In the feudal times nine-tenths of the meat was chopped and pounded with a pestle and mortar before serving, and in this way it could be eaten with very little need of knife or fork. A dish used during the reign of Richard II. was called "Cokagrys." The recipe for preparing it was elaborate. A rooster was stuffed with pig's liver minced and seasoned with pepper, cloves and cinnamon. Then a pig was skinned and stuffed in the same manner. The two were then fastened together and parboiled and then roasted, being basted meantime with egg seasoned with saffron.

while late surgery in such cases comparatively few."

Appendicitis is common among children between five and fifteen years of age. There is no particular food which can be singled out as especially to cause it unless possibly fruiting small pits or seeds. Delay is dangerous in children than in adults. The symptoms described by Dr. Murphy come in definite order, approximately regular intervals. They are: First, pain in the abdomen, often severe; second, nausea, vomiting within a few hours, commonly within three or four after the onset of pain; third, abdominal sensitiveness, most marked on the right side or, more particularly, over the appendix; fourth, a temperature two to twenty-four after onset of pain.—New York Times.

KNEW THE WORD "KIRK"

But Went Astray When He Followed It Into the Turkish.

To hold down successfully the office of governor of a state or vice president of the United States one does not have to be up on oriental languages. So the Honorable Thomas R. Marshall never hesitates to tell this on his own authority. It was at a reception in Indian Territory which took place when the British army was driving the Turks out of Thrace. The battle of Kirk Kill had just been fought.

"Odd name that—Kirk Kill," said the then governor of Indian Territory. "Forty Churches," or, in Turkish, mosques. Now, isn't it queer that the word 'kirk,' which, as we all know, stands for 'church' in the Scotch Gaelic, and which appears in Gaelic and other languages of northern Europe, should have precisely the same meaning in Turkish? It makes one wonder whether all tongues may have had a common source, and if so it would probably be found that that source was in the east."

There was murmured applause every one except an unobtrusive professor, who had been hovering about the group.

"Pardon me, governor," he piped, "but your conclusions, while interesting, might be called—er, a little leading. It is perfectly true that Kiliç is the Turkish for 'Churches,' but it is the word 'seh' that means a place of worship, while 'kirk' means 'forty.'" late surgery in such cases saves comparatively few." Appendicitis is common among children between five and fifteen years of age. There is no particular food that should be singled out as especially liable to cause it unless possibly fruits having small pits or seeds. Delay is more dangerous in children than in adults. The symptoms described by Dr. J. B. Murphy come in definite order at approximately regular intervals. They are: First, pain in the abdomen, sudden and severe; second, nausea and vomiting within a few hours, most commonly within three or four hours after the onset of pain; third, general abdominal sensitiveness, most marked on the right side or, more particularly, in the appendix; fourth, rise of temperature two to twenty-four hours after onset of pain.—New York World.

VIEW THE WORD "KIRK."

Went Astray When He Followed It Into the Turkish.

Hold down successfully the job of governor of a state or vice president of the United States one does not have to be up on oriental languages. The Honorable Thomas R. Marshall hesitates to tell this on himself: "I was at a reception in Indianapolis which took place when the Bulgarian arch was driving the Turks out of Macedonia. The battle of Kirk Kelisseh had just been fought. I added name that—Kirk Kelisseh," the then governor of Indiana. "It means 'Forty Churches,' or, rather, ques. Now, isn't it queer that the word 'kirk,' which, as we all know, is for 'church' in the Scotch vernacular, and which appears in German and other languages of northern Europe, should have precisely the same meaning in Turkish! It makes us wonder whether all tongues may not have had a common source, and if that it would probably be found that source was in the east." There was murmured applause from everyone except an unobtrusive little essor, who had been hovering near the group. "ardon me, governor," he piped up, "your conclusions, while interesting, might be called—er, a little misleading. It is perfectly true that Kirk Kelisseh is the Turkish for 'Forty Churches,' but it is the word 'kellis' that means a place of worship, and 'kirk' means 'forty.'" "And the professor was right.—New York Sun.

Children Cry FOR FLETCHER'S CASTORIA

The new courthouse was unfinished, but would be used, as the session fortunately fell in the summer.

Now the housewives laid their heads together to contrive how the court-officials, litigants and witnesses—should be lodged and fed. There was almost nothing that could be bought, except sugar, molasses, tea, coffee and flour. But they had an abundant supply of yellow legged chickens, home cured hams, milk, eggs, butter and cream, as well as their vegetable gardens to draw on. There was no fresh fruit, but they brought out their cherished stores of wild plum marmalade and wild crabapple preserves. Both were made with molasses, and after they had sufficient time to season were really delicious. Besides, the hillsides were pink with the beautiful wildwood sorrel, the leaves of which make delicious pies in skillful hands.

The village boasted one group of forest trees, a small grove of sugar maples, half a mile away, and in their shade Mr. Atwater built a long table with sawhorses and boards. With the combined stock of table linen, crockery and cutlery possessed by the housewives the table was laid with sufficient elegance, according to pioneer standards. It was felt that the court would be properly feasted, but how about lodging? That was the real difficulty. The tiny houses and their beds were full to overflowing with their proper inmates.

But there was the loft of the carpenter shop. The store had a whole bolt of unbleached muslin. It was torn into lengths equal to the length of the loft and sewed together by hand, of course.

Then the loft floor was covered deep with nice clean shavings, the immense sheet laid over them and tacked to the walls all the way round. On this Broddingnagian bed the court lay in two rows. From the extra supply required for winter enough quilts were mustered to cover the sleepers. As for pillows no one gave a thought to those effeminate luxuries. The lawyers might lay their heads on their saddlebags or their rolled up coats and be thankful.

Thus was the circuit court sumptuously fed and sufficiently lodged, thanks to the ingenious women of Henry county.—Youth's Companion.

A Good Salesman.

"What!" cried the careful housewife. "You charge me a dollar for these potatoes?"

"Yes, ma'am," answered the polite grocer. "That is the very lowest price we can sell them for."

"How is it that I can get them from Brown's for 90 cents, then?"

"I cannot say, madam. Perhaps Mr. Brown has taken a fancy to you. He is a widower, and you are beautiful. Unfortunately I— Yes'm, a dollar."

A Chinese Story.

A Chinese barber while shaving a customer's head drew blood and put one of his fingers on the place. Again he made a cut and put down another finger, and so on until he had no more fingers free. "Ah," said he as he paused in his work, "a barber's trade is difficult. We ought to have a thousand fingers!"

Jack Jowett set out at once in the cool of the dawn. Once he was chased by some troopers who trotted in from the pike that crossed his path, but his bay mare soon outpaced theirs. Like the wind he raced through lanes, over low stone fences, up the side of the hill to beautiful Monticello, the home of Governor Jefferson. He warned Jefferson of the approach of the British, and then, with a fresh horse, he dashed down the steep mountain road into Charlottesville. Rushing into the hall where the assembly was in session, he called to the members to flee, for Tarleton's dragoons would soon be at their heels. In a few moments the hall was empty, and the members were on their way across the mountains to Staunton, where they would be safe from pursuit.

Jack rode on to his tavern, but found there a wounded officer of the Continental army—General Stevens. He dressed the sick man in a suit of his own clothes, carried him downstairs and put him on the fresh horse, with bags of corn in front and behind—the very picture of an old farmer going to the mill. Side by side Jowett and Stevens rode out of town, which by 10 o'clock was in the possession of Tarleton's men. Pausing as he reached the top of a hill, Jack saw his own tavern in flames.

The British, who had reason to suspect the young man in a uniform, set out in chase of him, but Jack's horse was again too speedy for them, and he got safely away to Washington with the news that Tarleton was no longer acting in support of Cornwallis—a bit of information that was of the greatest value to the commander of the Continental army.

To Jack Jowett's quick wit and daring the author of the Declaration of Independence and many another hardly less famous patriot owed their liberty and perhaps their escape from a traitor's death upon the scaffold.—Youth's Companion.

A Marshal's Retort.

It is on record that the Prince of Orange, filled with rage because he had been beaten at Fleurus, Leuze, Steinkerke and Nerwinds, alluding to the Marshal of Luxembourg:

"Can it be that I shall never beat that hunchback?"

"How does he know that I am a hunchback?" said the French marshal. "He never saw my back; I always saw his."

thorium is only about eight years, and thus while money spent on radium may be taken as being unaffected by depreciation a store of mesothorium would need replenishment in a few years.

There are, however, large supplies of minerals containing some 1 or 2 per cent. of uranium. Among such "low grade" minerals are autunite and carnotite perhaps come next to pitchblende and the uraninites in respect of uranium content. Oranite and other minerals also contain uranium, and the supply of radia-active material would be fairly wide if all these minerals could be included from the point of view of radium production.

The usual processes of radium extraction are, however, tedious and protracted, and the difficulties of economically treating the poorer minerals by their aid are very great. The operations, which are described in The London Times, begin with the removal of the uranium or of the uranium and vanadium in the case of carnotite.

The residues contain a great deal of silica, and a large number of metals that are ordinarily present have to be got rid of. The radium is obtained usually in the form of a mixture of radium and barium chloride at the end of the first or "open" process, and the final operation consists in separating the pure radium chloride from the barium salt, a process which may take several months.

The first operation is generally effected by boiling the residues with sodium carbonate solution, when the radium and barium form insoluble carbonates. These are dissolved in hydrochloric acid, certain chlorides of other metals also remaining in the solution.

The radium-barium is next precipitated as sulphate, which is once more converted into carbonate, and this again into chloride. Finally the material is submitted to a long series of fractional crystallizations, by which radium chloride is gradually separated out in a more or less pure state.

One of the most important advances in the technique of radium extraction that has so far been made is perhaps a concentrating process which has been invented by two English chemists—Kent Smith and H. B. Rolfe—whereby the radium containing residues can be reduced in bulk so that about 95 per cent. of the material is discarded.

Von Hutten's Misery.

Very sad was the fate of Ulrich von Hutten, one of the greatest writers Germany has ever produced. Unable to earn a living, he was reduced to tramping through the country, begging food and shelter from the peasants. One bitter winter's night both were refused, and next morning he was found frozen stiff and cold in the drifting snow outside the village. "The only thing he died possessed of besides the rags he wore," says his biographer, Zwingli, "was a pen."

The Only Digestible Kind.

A young man who is striving for political honors and who therefore feels called upon to do considerable public talking was recently waited upon by a delegation of men residing in one of the poorer regions of his district.

He was greatly pleased when their spokesman requested a speech from him at an early date.

"What kind of a speech?" he asked.

"An after dinner speech," replied a wag in a shabby coat.

At Normile's Garage.

Jos. McConkie gave evidence along the same line as the other witnesses. In one part of his evidence witness told how, when he saw the fighting going on, he turned and asked those standing near him to assist him in stopping the colored man from beating the one-armed man. Just as they started to interfere the shooting began.

Mrs. Jas. Wheeler, wife of the proprietor of the hotel, when sworn said she knew nothing about the shooting, as she was in the dining room at the time. She did not know one of the showman from the other.

Mr. Jas. Wheeler said the row started among several foreigners and the colored man. He was not sure as to the exact cause of it, but thought the colored man tried to get some of the money of these foreigners. It was then who hit the colored man and taking him by the collar pushed him out of the hotel. He gave evidence as to the negro's actions around the hotel, but as he was busy looking after his business he did not see the shooting. The colored man had been "bumming" drinks all day by singing, etc., and appeared to be of such good nature that he was the last man the witness expected to see get into trouble. He did not know the man who did the shooting, consequently he 8 feet deep.

Number—On an oblong building, at least two. On an L-or-T-shaped building, at least three. On a U-shaped building, at least four.
Location—Preferably at opposite corners, though this may be modified to avoid manure, or to go down near conductor-pipe or other metallic portion of the structure. If conductor-pipe is on the side of the building the ground rods should be at the corners as above stated, the eave-troughs connected with it, and then the conductor-pipe also grounded.

Ground—Rods should not be bunched, but should be distributed as well as possible.

Method—In deep soil drill a hole at least eight feet deep and run cable down. In shallow soil attach cable to metallic ground-plate, which is put down as deep in the soil as possible; or run it into a well or stream or crevice in the rock. If none of these are feasible, put cable as deep as possible and lay large flat stone over it.

Caution—Be present and see that ground-connections are properly made. The rest of the system may be inspected at any time, but the groundings only when they are being put down.

3. Systems—Run cable from ground up corner to eave, thence to ridge, along ridge to other end, thence down to eave, thence to other ground, making a complete circuit. All cables should be connected in one system. No stubs or dead ends should be left ungrounded.

Caution—Cables should be protected from ground six or eight feet up by nailing boards around them.

4. Attachment—Fasten cable to barn with nails, staples, clips, or metal "Dispersers".

Caution—Do not use insulators.

5. Points—Number—20 to 30 feet apart.

Location—On ridge, first ones not over five feet from end. On or beside chimneys or cupolas. On dormers. Also on silos.

Height—Four to five feet, except those on or beside chimneys, cupolas or similar prominences; these must extend at least eighteen inches above the highest part.

Form—Strong tubes, of same weight and material as rods.

6. Metallic Portions of Structure :
Roof-gutters—Top connected to rod, and bottom grounded. Eave-troughs and conductor-pipes, free end of eave-troughs connected to rod, and conductor pipe grounded. Hay-fork track, both ends connected to rod. Tanks, connected to rod above, grounded below. Windmill, connected to rod above shaft grounded below. Metallic roof, grounded at two or four corners, not from peak under any consideration. Points should be used on the ridge and other prominences.

7. Wire fences—In field, a grounding at least every twenty rods. In yards, at the four corners. At building, ground at first post from building.
Weight of groundings—Equal to three No. 12 or one No. 9 wire.

How made—Stapled on posts in contact with all wires of fence, and extending at least three feet in the ground, and projecting above fence.

8. Shade trees—Protect where feasible.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

The Old Time Custom of "Plowing the Horse's Tail."

Animals seem to have no idea of exercising to keep warm. They just t their backs to the wind and crot but perhaps if one had only a liml amount of fuel it would be better j to keep a spark alive till the snap over than to burn it all out in a hours.

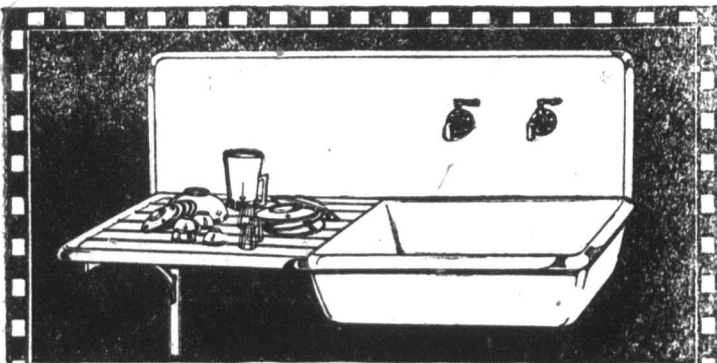

The first legislation against cruelty animals is said to have been an enment passed in the days of Qu Elizabeth prohibiting "plowing at horse's tail," as then practiced in land.

This custom consisted in lashing plow beam to the horse's tail wit bit of rope and then, while one r held the plow, another walked b ward before the animal, guiding it v blows of a stick. It seems as tho this plan must have cocked the p so high into the air that the p would take no hold on the soil. seems also as if only the most sp less of equines would have submit to the treatment, but that it was quently done the act against it pro The cruelty of the practice needs demonstration; it could not have t profitable, but was perhaps prefer to starvation. Whether the English islators were moved solely by pity the miserable beast or whether t desired to make a market for Eng plows and harness does not appe From "A Farmer's Notebook," by E. D. Phelps.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Council Chamber,
June 1st, 1914.

Council met in regular session on Monday evening, Mayor Alexander in the chair.

Present—Reeve Denison and Councillors Wiseman, Waller, Dickinson, Graham, Walters, Carson.

The minutes of the last regular session were read and confirmed.

Mrs. R. Smith and Mrs. J. McMurrin, a delegation from the W.C.T. U., appeared before the council in reference to matters pertaining to the Children's Protective Act. They presented to the town a printed circular containing a portion of the Act relating to children being out after nine o'clock at night without their parents or guardians, and wanted to secure the signatures of the Mayor and Chief of Police, to the circular in the hope that the document, which will be printed and circulated in the homes of Napanee, would carry a stronger intimation.

On motion of Councillors Waller and Wiseman the Mayor and Chief of Police were given the authority to officially place their signatures to the circular.

Mr. Geo. A. Hartman asked for permission from the council to move a house from the corner of Dundas and Robert streets to a new location on the Belleville road, and he would assume all responsibility for any and all damages.

Request granted.

G. F. Ruttan, solicitor for J. W. Foster, asked the council to have the assessment of the Brisco House property changed from John Mack to J. W. Foster, and also to have the assessment of the Warner Block and opera house struck off as the buildings were completely destroyed by fire.

The Clerk was instructed to answer the request.

Electa B. Grange asked the council not to construct the proposed granolithic walk outside the trees on the south side of Isabella street from Centre to John streets, as it would have to be built over a private drain, and in case anything went wrong with the drain it would cause considerable trouble.

No action was taken.

A communication was read from J. H. F. Blue, Toronto, who was looking for a site for the establishment of a veneer factory. The company owned 47000 acres of valuable timber land in South America, all valuable cabinet material. They proposed to bring the timber in the log to Canada to their Canadian plant, and consequently wanted a location with water facilities as well as railroads. Their plant will be the second of its kind in all Canada. He wanted to know what inducements the town had to offer. Would the town give a bonus, or loan, or both?

On motion of Councillors Waller and Wiseman the Clerk was instructed to communicate with Mr. Blue and get more definite information.

Mr. W. F. Morris and a large number of other ratepayers, resident of Mill street, west, petitioned the council for three small lights to be placed as follows: one on the corner near the residence of Mr. Blake Mowers, and one at the top of Mill street at Mr. Ford's corner.

Request granted.

Dr. Cowan, the Medical Officer of Health, appeared before the council and together with the members discussed the question of garbage in the town. Several methods were discussed, and it was thought best to leave the question open for a while in order to give the members of the council a chance to think it over.

On motion of Councillors Carson and Waller the amount of $4.78 was

UNION STOCK YARDS.
TORONTO, June 1.—Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards were 150 cars, comprising 2717 cattle, 1953 hogs, 260 sheep and lambs and 427 calves.

Butchers.
Choice loads of steers sold at $8.25 to $8.40, and one load at $8.55; good to choice loads of steers and heifers at $8 to $8.35; medium to good at $7.80 to $8.10; common, $7.30 to $7.65; choice cows, $7 to $7.50; good cows, $6.50 to $6.90; medium cows, $5.75 to $6; canners and cutters, $3.75 to $4.75; bulls, $6.50 to $7.65.

Feeders and Stockers.
Feeders were firm, and one or two lots of short-keep steers sold at $8 to $8.10; choice steers, $7.50 to $7.80; medium steers, $7.25 to $7.40; stockers sold up to $7.10 for eastern production.

Milkers and Springers.
There was little change in the market for milkers and springers only that there were few of the choice quality, and prices ranged from $55 to $85.

Veal Calves.
Receipts were moderate, quality common and medium, and prices firm. Common calves at $7 to $7.50; medium at $8 to $8.50, and good at $9 to $9.50; choice calves at $10 to $15.50.

Sheep and Lambs.
Receipts were moderate and prices steady. Heavy fat ewes, $4 to $5.60; light ewes, $6.50 to $7.25; rams, $4 to $6; and clipped, 50c to 75c per cwt. less. Spring lambs, $5 to $8 each.

Hogs.
The delivery of 2400 northwestern hogs on the market caused prices to decline 10c to 15c per cwt. Selects, fed and watered, $8.20 and $7.85, and $8.45 weighed off cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, June 1.—The following prices were quoted at the Montreal live stock yards to-day:

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

Old Time Custom of "Plowing at the Horse's Tail."

imals seem to have no idea of ex-ing to keep warm. They just turn r backs to the wind and crouch, perhaps if one had only a limited out of fuel it would be better just keep a spark alive till the snap was r than to burn it all out in a few rs.

he first legislation against cruelty to imals is said to have been an enact-t passed in the days of Queen sabeth prohibiting "plowing at the se's tail," as then practiced in Irel.

his custom consisted in lashing the w beam to the horse's tail with a of rope and then, while one man l the plow, another walked backrd before the animal, guiding it with ws of a stick. It seems as though plan must have cocked the plow high into the air that the point ld take no hold on the soil. It ms also as if only the most spirit-f of equines would have submitted the treatment, but that it was fre-tly done the act against it proves.
e cruelty of the practice needs no onstration; it could not have been fitable, but was perhaps preferable starvation. Whether the English legtors were moved solely by pity of miserable beast or whether they red to make a market for English ws and harness does not appear.—

Request granted.
Dr. Cowan, the Medical Officer of Health, appeared before the council and together with the members discussed the question of garbage in the town. Several methods were discussed, and it was thought best to leave the question open for a while in order to give the members of the council a chance to think it over.

On motion of Councillors Carson and Waller the amount of $4.78 was ordered remitted to Mr. M. S. Madole being amount of taxes overpaid by an error.

Moved by Councillors Waller and Wiseman, that this council attend at a session of the Bay of Quinte Conference on Thursday at 3.30 o'clock, and, on behalf of the town, extend to that body a hearty welcome to our town.
Carried.

On motion of Councillors Walters and Graham the street committee were instructed to proceed at once with the constructions of the Robert street sewer.

On motion of Councillors Waller and Graham the streets committee were instructed to construct the following cement walks: east side of John, from Graham to Isabella; east and west side John, Dundas to Mill; west side of Centre, 2 parts, Bridge to Graham; east side of Centre, Bridge to Thomas; west side Centre, Dundas to William; south side Graham, John to Centre; south side Isabella, John to Centre; south side Thomas, John to East; south side Thomas, Adelphi to G. T. R. tracks; north side Mill, Richard to John; south side Water,
Union to Robinson; west side Richard, Dundas to Water; south side Bridge, 1 block west to Robinson;
north side Dundas, Adelphi to Thomas;
south side Ann, Robert to Centre.

The motion was carried on the following division:

Yeas—Alexander, Carson, Dickinson, Denison, Graham, Walters, Wiseman.

Nays—Waller.
Coun. Waller objected to the passing of the whole list at once, as in his opinion it left a loop-hole for favoritism to be shown. He thought the council should name the walks to be constructed during the time elapsing between meetings and thereby control the situation.

French Cabinet To Resign.

PARIS, June 2.—The French Cabinet, under the Premiership of Gaston Doumergue, has decided to resign. The resolution was taken at a Cabinet council yesterday. The Cabinet will meet again to-day in order to draft a statement explaining the reasons for its retirement from office.

The chief factor in bringing about the resignation of the Government is understood to be the uncertainty of it being able to control a majority in the Chamber of Deputies, where some changes were brought about in the composition of the numerous groups at the recent general elections.

Wingham yesterday morning by a horse on the track. Mr. S. Moorehead, engineer, and Mr. Joseph Harrington, fireman, were injured when the engine rolled into the ditch. Both men were taken to the Wingham Hospital, where they now lie. They were badly shaken up, but not seriously injured. The balance of the train remained on the tracks. There were no other casualties.

A NICE LITTLE "DEAL."

HOW A MONTREAL MAN CLEANED UP THOUSANDS IN SELLING LAND TO THE OTTAWA GOVERNMENT.

The story of Bonnie Bel-air is the story of a deal by which Mr. W. T. Rodden, of Montreal, made a profit of many thousands by doing business with the Borden Government. It is a story which should be very satisfactory to Mr. Rodden but scarcely so satisfactory to the people of Canada.

Part of the story leaked out some time ago. The rest was told at a meeting of the Public Accounts Committee of the Commons a few days back. The Bonnie Bel-air property lies not far from Montreal. The Bonnie Bel-air block, proper, consisting of 80 acres, was purchased by Mr. Rodden in May, 1911, for $18,500. In the spring of the following year, he purchased an adjoining property, the McIntyre farm, which was 70 acres in size, for $33,995 and another two-acre lot for $5,000. The purchases were not cash transactions, not by a good deal, for the cash payment was small and the time for completing payments ran as far ahead as 1915. As a matter of fact, he did not pay one single dollar out Victoria county about a before polling took place. In it was contained this most significant paragraph:

"There is a report that many applicants were not really sure they had drilled in March and 1886, and, consequently, had no to swear to it. I think I can say you that nothing will be done to friends in that connection."

Did that paragraph mean anything else, could it mean anything else that applicants for Fenian bounties in Victoria might be that though they swore light making their applications, they be safe against prosecution for perjury because of Mr. McLeod's assurance that "nothing would be done to friends in that connection?"

For was this all. Some light shed by Mr. D. D. Mackenzie, for North Cape Breton. "This (McLeod) letter," he said, "was broadcast throughout the county the agents, on foot and on horse from house to house and followed by telling them that they had information that these people had committed perjury, and if the people did not as the agents wanted them to prosecutions would follow, but I voted right no prosecutions follow."

When Captain Andrew Land sentenced to jail for forgery, he released by the Department of Justice as administered under Borden given a Government job. Ronald Currie was sentenced to a penitentiary for perjury during his investigation into the conduct of Liberal office-holder, his case taken up by the Conservative Association of his Province and, before he was released from prison to the Department of Justice. When election is held in Victoria, the letter is signed by a Conservative candidate giving assurance that the thing will be done to our friends because of affidavits they might under certain conditions.

This is political morality Borden.

During the discussion in which McLeod's letter was read, the defence was given of the manner in which the Fenian Raid bounty system is used by the Conservative party ends. A letter signed secretary of the Halifax Conservative Association was read which, to a member of the Commons, contained "a direct intimation to apply the Fenian Raid bounty that it called at the rooms of the association their applications would receive and speedier treatment than went elsewhere" and "conveyed receipt the idea that the Militia was in direct correspondence with the secretary of a political association." In another case, at a municipal election into which politics was entering, letters went out telling applicants that they not receive a bounty unless applications were endorsed. Certain Conservative election workers.

All through Nova Scotia the legislation has been used for purposes of Premier Borden and his friends. The right to grant money to certain people under conditions has been used by the Borden party in the attempt to gain the facts have been made plain Commons again and again. Premier Borden and his Militia put party consideration and legislation intended to men for services rendered their try in time of danger is used to advance the cause of the Conservative party.

Trollite.

Trollite, which is a very common constituent of meteorites, is generally considered to be the simple sulphide of iron, though the exact chemical composition is in doubt. This is usually in the form of nodules, plates or rods, and, decomposing readily during flight, leaves the remaining mass with unique markings.

ing of 80 acres, was purchased by Mr. Rodden in May, 1911, for $48,500. In the spring of the following year, he purchased an adjoining property, the McIntyre farm, which was 70 acres in size, for $33,995 and another two acre lot for $5,000. The purchases were not cash transactions, not by a good deal, for the cash payment was small and the time for completing payments ran as far ahead as 1915. As a matter of fact, he did not pay one single dollar to the McIntyre estate until after he was paid for the property by the Dominion Government.

Mr. Rodden sold the property to the Militia Department in the spring of 1912, for cash. He had negotiated for the purchase of the three lots for a total of $89,000, payable on long terms, and he sold it to an obliging Government, through Hon. Sam Hughes, for $180,000 hard cash. Testifying under oath before the Public Accounts Committee, Mr. Rodden himself admitted that not a dollar had been paid the McIntyre people until after he received his fine fat profit from the Government. It was a very pretty transaction from the Rodden point of view.

On the witness stand, Mr. Rodden could not remember whether or not he had "arranged" with another Montreal man to have an offer made for the property just before it was sold to the Government. He could not remember in what bank he had placed the proceeds of the $180,000 cash sale, though he said that the money went to his personal use.

Another interesting feature in connection with the investigation was supplied by the attitude of Hon. Sam Hughes, the Minister through whose department the "deal" was made. Throughout the enquiry the Minister was persistent in breaking in with interruptions when pointed questions were asked by members of the committee. It was not because of any assistance from Colonel Hughes that the story was told.

But nothing can wipe out the main facts of the case. Mr. Rodden purchased for $89,500 on long terms, a piece of property which the Borden Government bought from him a year later for $180,000 cash. The Government has obtained for military purposes a piece of ground which is so low that it is liable to be flooded every year and the Government's friend, Mr. Rodden, has obtained a profit of $90,000 after holding the property for only twelve months.

Mr. Rodden makes the money and the people of Canada pay the piper.

WAS IT CONDONING PERJURY?

HOW THE CONSERVATIVES CARRIED ON AN ELECTION IN NOVA SCOTIA—USING FENIAN RAID BOUNTIES FOR PARTY PURPOSES.

A startling exposure of the methods used by the Conservatives to carry the recent Provincial by-election in Victoria, Nova Scotia, was made in the Commons last week when condonation of perjury was charged against Mr. Philip McLeod, now a member of the Nova Scotia Legislature. The exposure came when Mr. J. H. Sinclair, M. P., for Guysboro, read to the House a letter signed by Mr. McLeod during the election contest. That letter, to quote Mr. Sinclair, practically told Victoria county applicants for Fenian Raid bounties that Mr. McLeod had "sufficient influence with the (Borden) Government to see that a man who makes a false statement in applying for the bounty will not be punished and that perjury will be condoned."

The letter was distributed through-

Victoria county about a week ere polling took place. In it there contained this most significant graph:

There is a report that many of the applicants were not really sure that they had drilled in March and April, and, consequently, had no right to wear it. I think I can assure that nothing will be done to our applicants in that connection."

What that paragraph means anything, could it mean anything else, but applicants for Fenian Raid bounties in Victoria might be certain that though they swore lightly in their applications, they would be safe against prosecution for perjury use of Mr. McLeod's assurance, "nothing would be done to our applicants in that connection?"

It was this all. Some light was thrown by Mr. D. D. Mackenzie, M. P., North Cape Breton. "This (McLeod's) letter," he said, "was sent broadcast throughout the country by agents, on foot and on horseback, Mr. McLeod's agents, who went from house to house and followed this line telling them that they had information that these people had committed perjury, and if the people did not vote, elections would follow, but if they did right no prosecutions would follow."

When Captain Andrew Landry was sentenced to jail for forgery he was used by the Department of Justice, administered under Borden, and in a Government job. When Mr. Currie was sentenced to the penitentiary for perjury himself in investigation into the conduct of a rural office-holder, his case was taken up by the Conservative Association of his Province and, before long, was released from prison by the Department of Justice. When an election is held in Victoria county, a man is signed by a Conservative candidate giving assurance that "nothing will be done to our friends" use of affidavits they might take in certain conditions.

This is political morality under len. During the discussion in which Mr. McLeod's letter was read, other evidence was given of the manner in which the Fenian Raid bounty legislation is used by the Conservatives for years. A letter signed by the secretary of the Halifax Conservative Association was read which, to quote a member of the Commons, contained direct intimation to applicants for Fenian Raid bounty that if they did not at the rooms of the association applications would receive better speedier treatment than if they were "elsewhere" and "conveyed to the Minister of the Interior." The Minister of the Interior was in direct correspondence with the secretary of a political association. In another case, during a municipal election into which parties were entering, letters were sent to applicants that they could receive a bounty unless their applications were endorsed by a certain Conservative elector.

Through Nova Scotia the bounty legislation has been used for party purposes of Premier Borden and his friends. The right to grant public money to certain people under certain conditions has been used by the Borden party in the attempt to gain votes. Facts have been made plain in the news again and again. But Premier Borden and his Minister of the Interior put party consideration first in legislation intended to reward for services rendered their constituents. Time of danger is used to add to the cause of the Conservative

A SYMBOLIC DEATH AND RESURRECTION

Real Baptism is the Burial of Human Will Into the Will of God.

Baptism a Symbol of Consecration—The Old Creature Buried In Baptism—The New Creature Arises to Walk In Newness of Life—Baptized With Christ's Baptism—Importance of the Symbol.

PASTOR RUSSELL

May 17.—Pastor Russell, whose Photo-Drama of Creation not only presents the story of man's redemption, but also outlines earth's history from its beginning, preached to-day upon Baptism. His text was, "Therefore we are buried with Him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life."—Romans 6:4.

Water baptism, the Pastor declared, is merely a picture of the real baptism. The Apostle explains from various points of view the real baptism, without which the symbol is a mere form. Whoever receives the real baptism thereby becomes a member of the Body of Christ, the New Creation; but whoever has it not is not a New Creature, a member of the Body of Christ, though he were baptised in water a thousand times.

The Pastor then showed that the real baptism is into Christ's death, not into water. This baptism takes place at the moment of full consecration to God—complete surrender to do the Divine will, even unto death. This burial of the will into God's will is reckoned to be the death of the human being. Therefore the Apostle says to the Church, "Ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God." Thenceforth the consecrated are no longer counted as human beings, but as New Creatures in Christ. This burial of the will into the Divine will is instantly followed by the begetting to newness of life—to a new nature.

Water Baptism as a Symbol.

Next the Pastor discussed water baptism. Reviewing the various theories of the different denominations, he explained wherein these are not in harmony with Scripture. Neither sprinkling nor pouring could in any way be considered a picture of death and burial. He called attention to the fact that the Greek word baptizo signifies immersing, covering, plunging; and that wholly different words are used in the Greek when sprinkling, pouring or raising is meant. The speaker so fully treated the subject as to leave no doubt that immersion is the Scriptural form of baptism.

The Pastor then discussed immersion as set forth by the Baptists and the Disciples. Both denominations have the right form; but the Disciples preach the baptism taught by John the Baptist, not baptism into Christ; and the Baptists emphasize the symbol rather than the reality—consecration unto death. Apparently the speaker sustains his point; for he certainly harmonizes all the Scriptures bearing upon the is the Scriptural form of baptism, the Pastor next considered the subject as presented in Romans 6. There the Apostle sets forth the deep significance of burial with Jesus. From the moment of consecration the Christian should walk in newness of life, and his daily course should be altogether different from that of the world.

The Pastor then explained this walking in newness of life. To the Christian, "Old things have passed away"—old hopes, ambitions, motives, etc. These have given place to new hopes, higher ambitions, better motives. To these the first general Law is given—the Golden Rule. To be the Lord's representative, every Christian must love his neighbor as himself—must deal with him as he would have that neighbor deal with him.

How the Christian Fulfills the Law.

The Pastor showed that God has made a provision for the Church which He did not make for the Jews. Israel had a typical mediator, who could not offer real atonement for their weaknesses and have them judged according to their mind—their intentions. But, through Jesus Christ, the Father has made this very arrangement for the Church. When these keep the Golden Rule to the best of their ability, the righteousness of the Law is fulfilled in them, as the Apostle declares.

But in his consecration vow, the Christian agreed to do much more than merely keep the Golden Rule. He has covenanted to give up all of his earthly interests to do the Divine will and to drink the cup which the Father pours for all of Jesus' footstep followers. He must accept whatever the Father permits to come to him; he neither pours his own cup nor buries himself. This is beautifully pictured in water baptism. There the candidate submits to the will of the administrator. Figuratively the Lord lets the consecrated one down into death, and will one day raise him to perfect life beyond the veil.

CHAPTER I.

A glowing September morning was pouring its golden light through the open window of a morning-room or study, in the eastern wing of a picturesque old house standing half-way up a hill-side in one of the Midland shires. A background of beech-trees framed in its mellow red-brick walls, and before it lay a wide, undulating plain, many colored, and bounded by distant dim blue hills.

A pleasant room could scarce be found, though the furniture was old-fashioned, the curtains and carpet faded. The bay-window opened on a terrace, below which were pleasure-grounds; and in its recess stood a table, spread with dainty china and delicate silver—the remains of breakfast—and a vase of hot-house flowers, from a conservatory into which a glass door admitted.

The sole occupant was a gentleman, a slight, elegant-looking man of thirty or upward, with silky, wavy dark hair and small moustache, and an unmistakable air of distinction.

A pile of letters lay beside him, while he had pushed away his plate to make room for a book, which he was studying apparently with deep interest.

Presently he raised his eyes—"eyes of most unholy blue"—and looked upon the goodly landscape which lay before him. But his vision was evidently directed to some far distant object, and after a moment's thought he took up a pencil and began to scribble calculations on the back of a letter.

"Yes," he murmured, "if it can be carried out, I shall be a free man." Then opening the letter on which he had been scrawling, he turned over a page or two covered with small firm writing, and read slowly:

"I shall do nothing about a second trustee, until after your festivities," ran the paragraph he had selected. "Besides every one is away at this season. Need I say I have perfect confidence in you?"

He folded it up and put it under an elastic band, which held some other letters together, and tearing the envelope into minute fragments, threw them into the waste-paper basket beside him.

As he did so, a soft indistinct sound from an adjoining room—the door into which stood open—caught his ear. He paused and listened. The faint rustling drew nearer, and a pleasant voice began to sing in a low tone, as if the singer thought in song. The listener seemed to recognize the music or the voice. His face brightened; he half rose from his seat, but resumed it as if he wished to hear more. The next moment a lady walked through the door-way and stopped opposite to him.

A young lady, tall and slight, though round and graceful; she was simply dressed in a maize-colored print and a pretty muslin and lace apron tied with brown ribbons, a sash of the same marked her shapely waist, and tan gauntlets hid her

"You are too obliging! I want a volume of Pope. I had a dispute last night with Mr. Winton about a passage in the 'Rape of the Lock,' and I want to prove myself right."

"Ah!" a long-drawn "ah." "Is he here? Well, find your book, and I will escort you back."

He gathered up his papers, thrust them into a bureau, which he locked and rang for his valet.

His visitor returned to the library, a large sombre apartment pervaded with a faint delightful odor of Russia leather, and from one of the well-filled shelves selected a book. Then putting on her hat, she passed through the glass door by which she had entered, and stood gazing at the wide landscape visible from the terrace.

"All this seems tame enough after continental scenery," said the squire, joining her.

"It has a great charm for me. There is a sense of life, and freedom, and cheerfulness in English landscape that you scarcely ever find elsewhere." She descended the steps to the graveled path beneath as she spoke, her companion following, and coming up beside her.

"You have preserved a large amount of patriotism in spite of your long sojourn abroad."

"I have; yet I love Germany, too. I was very happy there."

"Were you ever unhappy?" he asked, with a slightly contemptuous up-lifting of his brows.

"Well, no, I do not think I ever was. I have been very, very sorry for the trouble of my friends, but not on my own account."

"Friends? Some unfortunate devils you refused, I suppose?"

"No, indeed. I never refused any one."

"I should have imagined you had shoals of bold barons and noble grafs at your feet."

She laughed merrily.

"You see I had not the reputation of being an heiress, and I am not so honored."

"What a curse hangs over the impunctious!" he returned blithely.

"I don't feel accused, though the grafs and barons did not propose to me. You must admit, too, that the greatest improvements, the most successful careers, have been achieved by men who had scarce a penny to begin with."

"Your only fault, Nora, is being too reasonable. It is a serious one, if you will permit a kinsman to speak plainly."

"A kinsman too remote for the right of fault-finding," she interrupted, with a saucy little nod.

"Ah! I have found you a very distant cousin indeed."

So talking, they walked across the pleasure-grounds, and through a gate which admitted them to a wide, park-like stretch of pasture, bordered at one side by a strip of woodland into which the path led. Soon the ground began to slope steeply down to a shallow valley, at the bottom of which ran a small rapid river, chafing and murmuring among big,

abled him to start clear of all incumbrances when he came of age, and the sixteen or seventeen years which had since elapsed had been diligently occupied by him in creating fresh ones.

He had lived with boundless extravagance and self-indulgence. He had done everything, seen everything, exhausted everything possible for a gentleman whose character was still fair, whose popularity was undiminished. Bankers and city men knew that his lands were heavily mortgaged; but society, as yet, only admired his magnificence, without doubting his solvency.

Evesleigh had seen little of its master of late years, but in his boyish days, and for some time after attaining his majority, Marsden hunted and shot in due season at Evesleigh.

His near neighbor and relative was Colonel L'Estrange, of Brookdale, the cottage just described.

The beauty of the sight had probably induced the builder of Evesleigh House to place that edifice on the verge of the estate, for the stream above-mentioned was its boundary on this side. The farm and residence of Brookdale had been purchased by the squire's great-grandfather, who settled it on his only daughter. This lady had married a penniless soldier of good family. Colonel L'Estrange was her grandson.

He had married in India, and soon after his return home, his delicate wife died somewhat suddenly, leaving him a baby-girl of about five years old. The colonel, a grave, taciturn man, old for his years, and unsociable in habits, lived on in his humble home, finding consolation in sport, and looked up to by the young Squire of Evesleigh as a mighty hunter, an unerring shot.

When Leonora, or Nora L'Estrange, who was a pet and plaything with her cousin, had reached her tenth year, her father suddenly discovered she was too old to be left entirely with her nurse. Of a boarding-school he would not hear, and, in short, the only solution to the difficulty which found favor in his eyes, was immediate marriage with a pretty, pale, timid girl, the orphan daughter of a former friend, whom he found in a dependent position, as companion to a rich old maiden lady, in the neighboring cathedral town of Oldbridge.

The new Mrs. L'Estrange was barely twelve years older than her step-daughter, and the Oldbridge gossips prophesied that young lady would be too much for her father's wife.

But, by some mysterious influence of sympathy or mutual comprehension, they drew to each other. Indeed, the old nurse did not hesitate to say that her young lady was regularly bewitched, and, for her part, was free to confess that it seemed horrid unnatural for a child to be so taken up with her step-mother.

Lower, Colonel L'Estrange, having been ordered to some German baths for cure of rheumatism, brought on by standing knee-deep in the river, fishing, removed his family, now increased by another daughter, beyond the reach of Oldbridge gossip, and, for reasons best known to himself, let Brookdale for several years.

He was already half-forgotten, when the local papers announced his death at Dresden.

His widow continued to reside abroad till the term for which Brookdale had been let expired, and had only returned, with her own and her step-daughter, in the preceding spring.

The ladies of Brookdale had finished their midday meal, which was

"I walked up to the Hall morning," resumed Miss L'Estrange when they had moved to the dining-room, "to look for that pass of Pope, about which you are mistaken, and there I found a squirrel, eating his breakfast at o'clock."

Winton muttered something inaudibly.

"Then he told me that Mrs. Ruthven, Lord and Lady Dorrington, a lot of people were coming to stay that he was going to give a grand ball to town and country folk, to have great doings. So, Mr. Winton, you are not to away shabbily, but stay, like a sacrificing Christian, and dance with me."

Winton glanced at her, a smile brightening his face.

"And when I have sacrificed myself," he said, "you will show your card filled up with the names of the golden youths who ho about you?"

"That is a base libel! At events, I shall have no court of E boys and ineligible surrounding here."

"Marsden is an extraordinary low," resumed Winton, thoughtfully. "The last time I saw him, as in July he offered me the shoot here, while I was staying with aunt and the canon, and swore hated the place, and would never Evesleigh again if he could help it. How unaccountable!" cried Mrs. L'Estrange. "It is such a sweet place, and looks so lovely in town!"

"Yes! Do you remember our nting expeditions when I was at ho thirteen years ago?"

"I do, indeed," said Mrs. L'Estrange, with a quick sigh.

"Have you been thirteen years India without once coming home exclaimed Miss L'Estrange. "I wonder you have any skin left."

"I had nothing to come home to. When Marsden was in India t hunting I saw a good deal of h. He was a prime favorite, in gr request. They said that the r Miss Guthrie was desperately aned not to have met him before. had pledged herself to his cous. But as Marsden was only presen to her a couple of days before wedding, even the charming C could not affect an exchange."

"Don't you like Mrs. Ruthven, t you speak so ill-naturedly?" s Miss L'Estrange, looking up fr the complicated stitchery with wh she was covering the pattern of handkerchief. "I thought her nice sympathetic, she was very kind ue."

"She is undoubtedly a charm woman. I may have the bad ta not to like her, that is nothing the point."

"It is odd! I am afraid you h grown cynical," returned Mrs. L'Estrange, gently.

"I don't think I have."

"Celia," repeated Nora, "what unusual name."

"Yes! I wonder where old Gut found it! It could not have b her mother's, for she was a Por guese half-caste."

"Yet Mrs. Ruthven is fair," ur Mrs. L'Estrange.

"A caprice of nature, she v darken as she grows older."

"How long has she been a w ow?" asked Mrs. L'Estrange.

"About two years. She left In after poor Ruthven's death, a wandered on the Continent till she could doff her weeds. Marsden ou to marry her, she has money enou to put him straight, if, as some s he is a little dippy."

The face it had shaded was fair and fresh, and lighted by a couple of large dark-gray eyes—eyes, lashes, eyebrows, all dark, compared to the light-brown hair that curled in a small fringe over her brow, and was gathered neatly back into a large knot.

She gazed for an instant in frank amazement at the gentleman, who rose to greet her—then a quick bright smile curved her red-lipped kindly mouth, and made a little coquettish interrogative dimple in one cheek, as she cried:

"Why how—when did you come, squire? We all fancied you were in Scotland."

"Well, you see I am not," he returned, advancing toward her with an outstretched hand, in which she placed hers. "And what are you doing, I should like to know, invading my premises in this burglarious fashion?"

"You know very well I always come to the library for any books I want, and 'by your leave,' too. You're such an absentee you ought not to be surprised if thieves did break through and steal."

"No, I am not in the least surprised," with emphasis.

"Well I was, a little, when I found the library window open," resumed the young lady, "but I thought Mrs. Storer was having a thorough cleaning, so I walked in, and imagining she was in this room I—"

"Unearthed the master! I shall accept your coming as a good omen." His handsome, though somewhat worn, face was aglow with pleasure as he spoke; but her eyes were attracted to the pile of letters and the open book, and she did not notice him.

"I arrived quite unexpectedly last night, to the great disgust of my few faithful retainers," he went on. "Do you know I have been planning great things—things that will rejoice you, ma belle Leonore."

"Pray don't give me my long name," she exclaimed, with a pretty impatient pout. "It always reminds me of that horrid raven tapping at the chamber door. What are your great things?"

"Dorington and Isabel are coming to stay with me, and the Harveys, Algy Balfour, Mrs. Ruthven and a lot more, and I am going to give a big ball to the nobility, gentry, and even the cads of the surrounding country."

"No, really!" with evident delight, "you are quite charming for thinking of such a thing."

"I am glad your estimate of me coincides with that of society in general."

"How awfully conceited you are, squire, but I am glad Lady Dorington is coming, and I shall be delighted to dance at your ball. Now I must go. How late you are! The breakfast things still on the table?" and glancing at the book as she walked to the window, "What are your studies? Chemistry? Who are you going to poison? I did not think you were scientific."

"Nor am I, I am only a student of human nature. But don't you want a book? Let us find one, and I will carry it home for you."

to himself, let Brookdale for several years.

"Ah! I have found you a very distant cousin indeed."

So talking, they walked across the pleasure-grounds, and through a gate which admitted them to a wide, park-like stretch of pasture bordered at one side by a strip of woodland into which the path led. Soon the ground began to slope steeply down to a shallow valley, at the bottom of which ran a small rapid river, chafing and murmuring among big, black, wet stones, and leaping gayly over an abrupt rocky barrier, some few hundred yards above, where they struck upon the stream. A narrow ivy-grown bridge spanned the fall, turning toward which they came in sight of a low irregular house, or rather cottage, on the opposite side.

The ground immediately round it was level, and then fell suddenly to the river, while the light through the trees behind showed that it stood on the summit of the bank; a richly green, close-shaven lawn, with a few flower-beds near the house, a projecting window or two, a veranda with supports of unbarked wood, and a huge elm tree, surrounded by a seat, standing near the edge of the declivity, made a pleasant picture.

"How thoroughly English this looks," said the squire. "It is quite Arcadian; but you will be awfully bored after awhile, and the sight of your abode reminds me I have never asked for Mrs. L'Estrange."

"She is quite well, and will be very pleased to see you."

"And I shall be only too glad to trouble you with my presence; but not this morning. I have a pile of letters to answer, and an appalling amount of arrangements to make. In short, I ought not to have come so far afield with you."

"You are a voluntary truant," she returned, pausing on the bridge.

"That I acknowledge. Now I have seen you to the edge of your own territory, I will say good-bye. If I come and beg a cup of coffee about eight or nine this evening, I suppose I shall not be barred out?"

"If the door is locked we will let you in through the window."

He bowed, and raising his soft felt hat with easy grace, stood looking after her as she walked away with a smooth light step down the path which led toward the cottage.

He was unmistakably a "squire of high degree." Above middle height, his well-proportioned figure had an air of picturesque dignity in his tough but well-cut shooting-coat his long, fine, imbrowned hand grasped a light walking-stick, and as he walked quickly back toward home, he cut the heads from the tall reeds and grasses bordering his path with sharp, vindictive strokes, as if he laid some detested enemy prostrate at every stroke.

"This folly—madness rather—is a desperate complication, yet it is irresistible," he muttered to himself. "I have only to be bold enough and I shall succeed! After? Weariness, perhaps; but I shall have had an interval of life and joy, it will be something to know that, come what may, I have been blessed."

He glanced round sharply and suspiciously, but the only living things near were a little brown squirrel that scampered in sudden fear up the rugged stem of an oak, and a snake rustling among the fallen leaves as it escaped to its hole.

He laughed to himself, a cynical laugh, very different from the soft, caressing smiles he bestowed on his fair visitor.

Clifford Marsden, the Squire of Evesleigh, was one of the fortunate individuals sometimes described as having been "born with a silver spoon in his mouth." He had succeeded his father while still a school-boy; the savings of his minority en-

to himself, let Brookdale for several years.

He was already half-forgotten, when the local papers announced his death at Dresden.

His widow continued to reside abroad till the term for which Brookdale had been let expired, and had only returned, with her own and her step-daughter, in the preceding spring.

The ladies of Brookdale had finished their midday meal, which was luncheon to their big neighbors, and dinner to themselves. Little Beatrice, Nora's half-sister, was teaching a depressed-looking Dachshund, with out-turned toes, to beg, when a neat parlor-maid opened the door, and said:

"If you please, ma'am, Mr. Winton is in the drawing-room."

Mrs. L'Estrange rose from her seat as if to join him, but Nora cried:

"We had better ask him in here. He has been shooting, I suppose, and you may be sure he is hungry."

"I will go and fetch him!" exclaimed Bea, jumping up and letting the biscuit with which she had been bribing the Dachs fall on the carpet as she rushed away. She was a delicate little creature of seven or eight, with big dark eyes, and fair hair, and idle, clever, willful monkey, with whom her mother strove in vain to be strict, and who imposed a good deal on her step-sister.

"Bea is quite excited," said Miss L'Estrange, laughing, and before the mother could reply the child returned, leading by the hand a tall, large-framed man of perhaps six-and-thirty or more, tanned by exposure to sun and wind a deeper red brown than was becoming, with thick, short andy hair, and light gray streaks. He wore a shooting-jacket and knickerbockers.

"I feel I am an intruder," he said, shaking hands with Mrs. L'Estrange, and then with Nora. "I did not intend to be so early. I heard you were in town, this morning, and calculated on clearing your luncheon hour, but the birds are very wild, or I was less keen than usual, and got over the ground quicker."

"We will forgive you," returned Mrs. L'Estrange, with a friendly smile, "and I dare say, if you have not already lunched, you begin to feel the need of something to eat."

"Thanks, no, I had some sandwiches an hour ago."

"Still, a biscuit and a glass of sherry," suggested Nora, insinuatingly.

"Are not to be despised," replied Winton, drawing a chair to the table, while one fair hostess poured out his wine, and another brought the biscuit tin.

"May I have some of the pretty brown feathers from those birds you left in the hall, for my doll's hat," asked Bea.

"I dare say your mamma will give them to you; I brought the birds for her. Were you in Oldbridge, too, Miss L'Estrange?" he continued, looking up quickly, as she offered him the biscuits.

"No, I have spent an idle, unprofitable morning, dreaming over the letters I was pretending to write."

"Dreaming! I thought you were far too practical to dream. What were you dreaming about?"

"The coming ball; the glories of Mrs. Ruthven and her jewels."

"Who is going to give a ball?" in a surprised tone.

"Clifford Marsden."

"Why he is, God knows where!"

"He is at Evesleigh. Come into the drawing-room, and I will tell you all about it."

Here Miss Bea was carried off by her German governess, not without loud remonstrances and reproaches addressed to Winton, who was always on the side of authority.

"I don't think the squire is cenary," said Nora, thoughtfully, letting her work drop into her lap. "Perhaps not," replied Winton carelessly, "Are you going to Winton laughed.

"If you are graciously pleased permit me," he added.

"Very well, you may come," she left the room.

Winton looked gravely after her a moment, his brows slightly kni if he were puzzled—not agree puzzled.

Then he turned to Mrs. L trange, and said abruptly:

Colonel L'Estrange was al- ways going to alter his will—which left all he possessed to Nora—but died without having done so; and my poor Bea is quite unprovided for."

"What an infernal shame! They ought never to have allowed you to marry without a proper settlement."

"They? Who?" asked Mrs. L'E- strange, with a tinge of bitterness. "I had few friends, and was not par- ticularly self-helpful. They were too glad to find me provided for and off their hands, to raise any question that might delay the happy release. This was only natural! However, if Nora reaches one-and-twenty and is still a free agent, I am sure she will carry out her intention of making a provision for Bea."

"When does she come of age?" "Next February."

"Hum! Time enough to marry and plague a man's heart out before that!"

"My dear Mark, what has put you out of humor with Nora? You must not dislike her unreasonably."

"Dislike her! she is not the sort of girl any man would dislike! But what a contrast between you two! I strongly suspect she bullies you! What hard lines you had all your life; I sometimes think over old times and wonder how you pulled through."

He looked at her as he spoke, a wonderfully kind expression softening his eyes.

"I am very happy and tranquil now," returned Mrs. L'Estrange, "so let the past bury its dead."

"If I had been—" Winton was be- ginning, when Nora returned with her hat on—a very becoming hat.

"Are you not going to walk with us, Helen?"

"No, dear, I promised Bea to take her to see a foal and a baby peac- ock, at the Home Farm."

"Well, Mein Herr! I await you." Winton rose, and shook hands with Mrs. L'Estrange.

"My aunt hopes you will come to luncheon to-morrow or on Friday, if you are in the town," he said.

"I will write to her. Good-bye for the present."

"Oh! I had almost forgotten," cried Nora, turning back at the door. "The squire said he would come and ask for a cup of coffee this evening about eight."

"He shall have it," returned Mrs. L'Estrange.

Winton, who had paused behind Nora, turned a questioning look on Mrs. L'Estrange, then followed the young lady of Brookdale through the open entrance door into the sunlight beyond, and the sound of their foot- steps on the freshly raked gravel soon died away.

Mrs. L'Estrange stepped out on the veranda, and looked after the re- treating figures.

"He was always wise and kind," she murmured to herself.

"Mother," cried Beatrice, from within, "I am quite ready."

CHAPTER II

Some ten days later the sun was striving to pierce the sultry haze of an autumnal day in London, and making the half-deserted streets ap- pressively warm.

Every one was out of town, and the chief clubs, shops, and hotels, were being painted and renovated during the breathing space between seasons.

A brougham stopped at the door of a well-known hotel in Bond Street, and a lady, dressed in a which lay on the sofa, chose a com- fortable chair and settled herself.

She had scarcely read half what The World says, when Mrs. Ruthven re-entered in a very becoming tea- gown—all creamy muslin and lace, lightened by tufty knots of soft crim- son ribbon. She was an attractive looking woman, without regular beauty—a soft pale complexion, with a certain richness of tint—a very red- lipped mouth, somewhat pouting—a wide, low forehead, and large, dark, beseeching eyes. Her hair was pro- fuse—a peculiar yellow, golden tint—and worn in a careless, irregu- lar fringe—which gave orderly and narrow-minded people an impression of untidiness.

"And, you do not go direct to Evesleigh?" said Mrs. Ruthven, plac- ing herself on the sofa and folding one foot under her, with Oriental suppleness.

"No. We leave at four o'clock for Bournemouth. Aunt Ilminster has been very unwell, and wishes to see me."

"Ah! the Duchess of Ilminster!" said Mrs. Ruthven, as if a little im- pressed. "But how will Mr. Marsden manage his preparations without you?"

"Perfectly well. He has excellent taste; he will order everything re- gardless of cost, and leave the pay- ment to Providence."

Mrs. Ruthven smiled, thoughtfully, with downcast eyes, as she opened and shut a large leather fan.

"You are a little hard on your brother! He has a right royal nature—and a fine estate."

"Yes. An estate that—with a lit- tle prudence, and a little ready mon- ey—would soon recover itself. I am always impatient with Clifford. He is quite old enough now to give up his follies and take to work, to ambi- tion! There must be some dozen girls in the marriage-market with heaps of money, any one of whom would jump at Marsden of Evesleigh. Then Parliament, and a splendid car- eer would be open to a man of his ability! I see him ambassador, sec- retary of foreign affairs—anything—in short," cried Lady Dorrington, laughing, "I am hard on my brother, because I know what he could do—and see how he wastes his life!"

Mrs. Ruthven made no reply, she looked at her fan, and a slight col- or rose in her cheek.

The Gold Dust Twins' Philosophy

If you have ever fumed and fussed, because of dirt and grime and rust, and said unto yourself, "Oh, dear! This household work will kill, I fear"—then it is time that you should find some other method far more kind.

Of all the woes a housewife bears, one always fills her day with cares: The kitchen after-meal-time muss, is quite enough to make one fuss. What, with the pots and pails and pans, the knives and forks and plates and cans, no task of man, however grim, the half as mean is handed him.

The Easiest Way

Two little willing workers aim to enter in this household game: their job, the lessening of work, a task that neither of them shirk. With active little hands and brains they grab the irksome household reins, till soon each kettle, pot or dish, is just as bright as you could wish. Every one was out of town and the chief clubs, shops, and hotels, were being painted and renovated during the breathing space between seasons.

A brougham stopped at the door of a well-known hotel in Bond street, and attracted the attention of a waiter lounging on the steps. He descended to ascertain what the occupant wanted. She was a large, distinguished looking woman of more than a certain age, with almost white hair, and black eyes; whose traveling costume of dark-gray serge and bonnet of gray straw and black ribbons had evidently been designed by a high-class modiste.

"Is Mrs. Ruthven here?"

"Yes, 'm."

"Is she at home?"

"I'll see, 'm."

The waiter disappeared, and soon returned.

"Mrs. Ruthven is in, ma'am."

"Open the door then." And the in- quirer alighted.

"Who shall I say?"

"Lady Dorrington."

The waiter ushered the visitot up- stairs to a handsomely furnished room, where, before a long glass be- tween the windows, stood a small, slight figure, in an exquisite ball dress of pale-gold satin with draper- ies of fine filmy white lace, caught up at one side with drooping bou- quets of wonderfully natural violet, clematis, and ferns. Two women, one in a dainty cap, the other in a smart hat, were standing back as if they had just desisted from the task of arranging the beautiful costume.

"A thousand apologies, dear Lady Dorrington, for receiving you in this extraordinary apparel; but I would not keep you waiting, as I know you have only a few hours in town!" cried the lady in the ball dress, ad- vancing and shaking hands with her visitor very cordially.

"I am charmed to have a peep at your robe of triumph, as I am sure it will be. It is quite perfect. Don't let me interrupt you, don't postpone the important study of final touch- es, now that you are full of your subject."

"There is little more to be done. We were just hesitating whether to loop up the lace on the shoulders with small bouquets, or with ruby and diamond butterflies. What do you say, Lady Dorrington?"

"My dear Mrs. Ruthven, I am no judge. I never attempted to dress, I knew it was no use. I just wore solid, serious clothes."

"You have admirable taste, I am sure. I am inclined for the butter- flies sparkling among the lace."

"I think, madame," said the dress-maker, deferentially, "there would be an elegant simplicity in the bouquets."

"If madame permits me to speak," cried the maid, in French, "I would say, the rubies and diamonds will be infinitely more distingue."

Mrs. Ruthven stood a moment gaz- ing fixedly at herself in the glass, and then said, decidedly:

"I will wear the butterflies. Bring me a tea-gown, Virginie, and remem- ber" (to the dressmaker) "I must have the dress complete by to-mor- row; the changes you have to make might be done in an hour."

"Oh, madame! not in an hour!"

"I will return immediately, Lady Dorrington," said Mrs. Ruthven, not heeding her, and sweeping away to- ward her bedroom, the door of which stood open. "There is such a bad light in my room, I was obliged to come here to see how I looked."

Her attendants followed—and Lady Dorrington, taking up The World,

A Personal Preference.

A well known magazine writer moved not so very long ago from Brooklyn to California. On the day before the family started west he went for a walk through the neighborhood with his four-year-old son.

"I suppose," said the father, "that you'll be sorry to leave all your little chums here?"

The youngster thought he would. At that he did not seem to show much emotion at the prospect of parting from all his friends.

"Which one will you miss the most?" inquired the parent.

The boy was not sure.

"Now," pressed his father, "which little boy of all the little boys you know do you like the best?"

The little chap considered a minute before answering.

"Well," he said at last, "I guess I like myself pretty well!"—Saturday Evening Post.

Storm Gods.

Storm gods in the mountains have ever been the inspiration of some of the world's best poetry and of fascinating legends in that literary storehouse—Asiatic, Egyptian and classic mythology. And, by the way, many students are now looking beyond the Aryans, beyond the Egyptians, beyond all Greeks, Mihoans and Latins, to a vast civilization antedating their most ancient histories—looking to how sunken Poseid.

All phenomena in nature, such as lightning, outbursts of rain, hail and snow in summits and ranges of peaks, all marshaling of huge mountain clouds for elemental war—earthquakes, cyclones, hurricanes, waterspouts at sea, huge waves beating over land as destroyers, outbursts of sulphurous and asphaltic flames from the earth, apparitions in the sky, as meteors, fireballs, bolides, comets, eclipses of the sun and moon—these all were supposed to be caused by an Intelligence ruling each, and they were persons higher than man and called gods.—New York American.

Pump Anchors.

A pump is a queer sort of anchor, but it has been found to be the best kind of an anchor for a sandy bottom. The anchor consists of a heavy piece of metal with a hole down through the center and a tube from this hole to the ship, so that water can be pumped from the ship down through the tube and out of the bottom of the metal mass. When this anchor drops to the sandy bottom and the pump is started it makes quicksand of the material round it so that it sinks in deep. When the pumping stops the sand hardens and holds the anchor. To raise the anchor it is necessary only to start pumping again and loosen the sand.—Saturday Evening Post.

and pound on the door. You've got a card, you know."

"Que diable!" exclaimed the count, sinking into the background.

"We might reconnoiter a bit," said Bazelhurst. "Have a look at the rear, you know."

Around the corner of the house they trailed, finally bringing up at the back steps. The windows were not only dark, but boarded up. While they stood there amazed and uncertain, the rain came down again in torrents, worse than before if possible. They scampered for cover, plunging three abreast beneath the same steps that had sheltered Penelope and Shaw such a short time before.

"Ouch! Get off my foot!" roared the duke.

"Zounds! Who are you punching, demme! Hullo! What's this? A door and open, as I live!" The trio entered the cellar door without ceremony. "Thank God, we're out of the rain at last!"

It was not until they had explored the basement and found it utterly without signs of human occupancy that the truth of the situation began to dawn upon them. Barminster's

"If I were only sure that no serious had happened to Cecil," murmured anxiously.

"I'm sorry, dear, for that scream," he apologized.

Suddenly he started and gazed tentatively in the direction of the hall house. A man—a sorry figure—slowly, painfully approaching from edge of the wood scarce a hundred yards away. In his hand he carried a stick to which was attached a cloth—doubtless a handkerchief. He was hatless and limped perceptibly. "It's Cecil!" whispered Penelope, horror struck tones. "Good heavens, Randolph, go to him! He is hurt."

It was Lord Bazelhurst. As he hurried down the drive to meet his thought of the feud in mind, two things even more hopelessly dilapidated ventured from the wood and hot up behind the truce bearer, who now paused to lift his shoulders in position of dignity and defiance. Shaw's heart was touched. The tact was enough to melt the pride of any adversary. Lord Cecil's knees trembled. His hand shook as if with chill. Mud covered, water soaked, bruised, their clothes rent in places, their hats gone and their matted, their legs wobbly, the trio tainly inspired pity, not mirth scorn.

"One moment, sir," called his ship, with a feeble attempt at severance. His voice was hoarse and shaky. do not come as friends, dem you, my sister here?"

"She is, Lord Bazelhurst. We'll this over later on," said Shaw in friendliest way. "You are worn and done up, I'm sure—you and friends. Come; I'm not as bad as think. Permit me, gentlemen, to vite you to partake of what we have. What say you?"

"Confound you, sir! I—I—" But brave effort failed him. He staggered and would have fallen had not duke caught him from behind.

"Thanks, old chap," said Barminster to Shaw. "We will come in for a moment. I say, perhaps you could us a dry dud or two. Bazelhurst is a bad way, and so is the count. It's a devil of a storm."

Penelope came down from the porch to meet them. Without a word took her brother's arm. He stared at her with growing resentment.

"Dem it all, Pen," he chattered "you're not at all wet, are you? I at me! All on your account too."

"Dear old Cecil! All on Evelyn's count, you mean," she said softly, fully.

"I shall have an understanding with her when we get home," he said.

nestly. "She shan't treat my sister like this again."

"No," said Shaw from the other side "she shan't."

"By Jove, Shaw, are you with us?" demanded his lordship in surprise.

"Depends on whether you are with me," said the other. Penelope flushed.

Hot coffee, chops, griddle cakes, maple sirup soon put the contented forces at their ease. Bazelhurst so forgot himself as to laugh amiably his host's jokes. The count responded in his most piquant dialect, and duke swore by an ever useful I

"Zounds! Who are you with me, demme! Hullo! What's this? A door and open, as I live!" The trio entered the cellar door without ceremony. "Thank God, we're out of the rain at last!"

It was not until they had explored the basement and found it utterly without signs of human occupancy that the truth of the situation began to dawn upon them. Barminster's face was white, and his voice shook as he ventured the horrid speculation:

"The good Lord save us—it's that damned haunted house Pen was talking about!"

"But ze lights?" queried the count. "Ghost?"

"Let's get out of this place," said Lord Bazelhurst, moving toward the door. "It's that beastly Renwood house. They say he comes back and murders her every night or so."

"Mon Dieu!"

"Penelope isn't here. Let's move on," agreed the duke readily. But even fear of the supernatural was not strong enough to drive them out into the blinding storm. "I say, look ahead, there's Shaw's place!"

Peering through the door they saw for the first time the many lights in Shaw's windows, scarce a quarter of a mile away. For a long time they stood and gazed at the distant windows. Dejectedly they sat down, backs to the wall and waited for the storm to spend its fury. Wet, cold and tired, they finally dozed. It was Lord Cecil who first saw the signs of dawn. The rain storm had come to a mysterious end, but a heavy fog in its stead loomed up. He aroused his companions and with many groans of anguish they prepared to venture forth into the white wall beyond.

Just as they were taking a last look about the wretched cellar something happened that would have brought terror to the stoutest heart. A wild, appalling shriek came from somewhere above, the cry of a mortal soul in agony.

The next instant three human forms shot through the narrow door and out into the fog, hair on end, eyes bulging, but sightless; legs traveling like the wind and as purposeless. It mattered not that the way was hidden; it mattered less that weeds, brush and stumps lurked in ambush for unwary feet. They fled into the foggy dangers without a thought of what lay before them, only of what stalked behind them.

Upstairs Randolph Shaw lay back against the wall and shook with laughter. Penelope's convulsed face was glued to the kitchen window, her eyes peering into the fog beyond. Shadowy figures leaped into the white mantle; the crash of brush came back to her ears, and then, like the barking of a dog, there arose from the mystic gray the fast diminishing cry:

"Help! Help! Help!" Growing fainter and sharper, the cry at last was lost in the phantom desert.

They stood at the window and watched the fog lift, gray and forbidding, until the trees and road were discernible. Then arm in arm they set forth across the wet way toward Shaw's cottage.

"Poor Cecil!" she sighed. "It was cruel of you." In the roadway they found a hat which she at once identified as the count's. Farther on there was a carriage lamp and later a mackintosh, which had been cast aside as an impediment. "Oh, it was cruel!" She smiled, however, in retrospection.

"By Jove, Shaw, are you with me," demanded his lordship in surprise. "Depends on whether you are v me," said the other. Penelope flush. The count respon in his most piquant dialect, and duke swore by an ever useful I. Harry that he had never tasted a breakfast.

"By Jove, Pen," exclaimed her brother in rare good humor, "it's almost to take you away from such a cooking as this."

"You're not going to take her away, however," said Shaw. "She has to stay."

"What—what the devil do you mean?" demanded Lord Cecil, his cup shaking so violently that the contents overflowed.

"She's going over to Plattsburg with me today, and when she comes back she will be Mrs. Randolph Shaw. That's what I mean, your lordship.

Three of his listeners choked with amazement and then coughed painfully. Feebly they set their cups down and gulped as if they had something to swallow. The duke was the first to find his tongue, and he was quite a loss for words.

"B—by Jove," he said blankly, "that demmed hot coffee!"

"Is this true, Penelope?" gasped his lordship.

"Yes, Cecil. I've promised to marry him."

"It isn't because you feel that I have no home with me?"

"I love him. It's a much older story than you think," she said simply.

"I say, that hits me hard," said the duke with a wry face. "Still, I join saying, God bless you."

"We're trying to end the feud, you see," said Penelope.

Tears came into his lordship's eyes. He looked first at one and then at the other and then silently extended his hand to Randolph Shaw. He wrung it vigorously for a long time before speaking. Then, as if through

THE END.

WHAT IS WORN.

Coats generally make the figure look thicker than is natural at the waist line.
Collars on coats and waists are both open and high.
Many of the smartest new waists are of stiff white material.
Some of the most airy and flimsy blouses have metallic lace for foundation.
Circular cut flounces on skirts have an increasing vogue.
Around the knees the fashionable skirt is as narrow as ever.
The short skirts are bringing out more fanciful stocking effects.
Modish shades are bright and clear like the colors of flowers.

THE POPULAR VEILS.

Colored Lining Gives Chic to the New French Fabrics.

The latest beauty veil is made of fine black silk spider web net and lined with flesh pink tulle. Two large patches made of black velvet are placed at suitable points, one to fall at the corner of the left eye and the other at the corner of the mouth. This is a specially becoming veil, flattering to the complexion and very comfortable to wear.

Another beauty veil which is a great favorite in Paris is made of pale helio-trophe net and dotted with a couple of black patches. On fair complexions heliotrophe tulle is very effective. The same may be said of cobweb tulle in a pale shade of lemon yellow.

For ordinary wear the favorite veil is that made of fine black silk tulle and dotted all over with white pin spots. Pale rose tulle dotted with white is also admirably becoming, and for women who go in for looking smart one can recommend the new veils in electric blue tulle dotted with black and white pin spots and finished with black velvet patches.

A great deal depends upon the veil.
Some of these lengths of fine tulle are real beautifiers. Others merely make the skin look hard or coarse. It is a capital idea to stick to one particular style of veil when it has been found to be becoming.

ARTISTIC FURNISHINGS.

A Dainty Receptacle For Music Books

The charming music cabinet illustrated may be carried out in any wood that suits the taste. It is one of the new art designs. The doors are fitted with pressed glass on which is a conventionalized crocus pattern. The sheets of music may be filed inside the cabinet and music books placed on the shelf underneath. A cabinet of this sort would be a convenient receptacle for the rolls from the automatic piano

The Correct Hand Towel.

Guest and hand towels are made of plain or bordered huckaback. Sometimes the border extends across the ends of the towels, which are finished

hem. Usually the ends are unfigured and are scalloped or hemstitched, and the border is a narrow one along both sides.

SUFFERED AGONY WITH NEURALGIA

Nothing Helped Her Until She Tried "Fruit-a-tives"

CAMPBELLVILLE, ONT., May 5th, 1913.

"I cannot speak too highly of 'Fruita-tives'. For over thirty years, I have suffered from Chronic Neuralgia and Constipation, experiencing untold agony.
The Neuralgia settled in my lungs and I took bottle after bottle of medicine without relief. The doctor told me I would not get better but 'Fruit-a-tives' proved that the doctor was wrong, by giving me quick relief and finally and completely curing me.

I would not have my present health if it was not for 'Fruit-a-tives' and I am glad of the opportunity of giving you this letter about such a splendid remedy as 'Fruit-a-tives', for the guidance of other women who may be similarly affected."

MRS. NATHAN DUNN.

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only medicine made from fruit juices and is particularly suited to women because of its mild action and pleasant taste.

"Fruit-a-tives" is sold by all dealers at 50c a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c, or may be obtained from Fruit-a-tives

NEW BED COVERS.

Choose One of the Dainty New Creations of Cretonne or Dimity.

Very charming are the bed covers made of plain rep or cotton taffeta upon which are applied garlands of flowers cut from chintzes or cretonnes.

Such a spread was shown in a lavender and gray room. The bed itself was of gray enameled wood, embellished with a narrow white line.

The bed cover was of pale gray rep.
The color of the bed, upon which was applied lavender cretonne flowers.
This same cretonne appeared again as window hangings.

The cotton spreads may be had in cream, tan, dull blues or any other neutral tint which can be made to tone in with any color scheme. They are quite expensive when made by an uphol-sterer or bought from a decorator, but any woman who is clever with her needle could make one.

Dainty dimity bed covers are also shown, either in plain white or cream or with narrow stripes in color. They are made long enough to tuck under the roll. Occasionally one sees separate that suits the taste. It is one of the new art designs. The doors are fitted with pressed glass on which is a conventionalized crocus pattern. The sheets of music may be filed inside the cabinet and music books placed on the shelf underneath. A cabinet of this sort would be a convenient receptacle for the rolls from the automatic piano or the records of the phonograph.

The very latest library and living room sets are beautiful examples of conventionalized orientalism in coloring and design. Studying those embroidered sets haphazardly classified as futuristic, we recognize them as definitely oriental.

The sets include scarf, pillow and table mat. One that attracted attention was of rich green rep, done in glistening fiber, in conventional design, with the larger figures heavily padded so that all of the embroidery formed an exquisitely shaded study in golden brown.

A living room set of scarf, pillow and table mat was made of leather brown linen mummy cloth, rich in embroidery of oriental design done in peacock blue, greens, terra cotta and browns. The same color scheme was varied in a mercerized rep hand bag, with a touch of red and black to give it a futurist tone. The bag was lined with emerald green satin.

Collars For Dancing Men.

You can carry one or two extra collars inside the band of your silk hat. Men who perspire freely when dancing go to the cloak room when their collars wilt and return in a few minutes with an unfaded collar.—New York World.

Flatterer.

Lady of Uncertain Age—Have you any small wax candles? Tomorrow is my birthday, and I want to put them in the cake. Diplomatic Grocer—Yes, ma'am. About two dozen?—Life.

Their Trade.

"What business is this Cupid & Hy-men firm in you read so much about?"

"They're in the wholesale match-making business."—Baltimore American.

Guest and hand towels are made of plain or bordered huckaback. Sometimes the border extends across the ends of the towels, which are finished below it with a one inch hemstitched hem. Usually the ends are unfigured and are scalloped or hemstitched, and the border is a narrow one along both sides.

Above the end scalloping or hemstitch there is sometimes embroidery done in many of the popular stitches and sometimes an initial worked in simple or elaborate design. The most durable towel is one hemstitched in a two inch hem.

Use of Embroidered Initial.

Some women always use a simple, single letter embroidered in satin stitch on all their household linen. They choose this mark and stick to it. The single letter is the most usual mark at present anyway. On towels it is placed just above the hem, if there is one—perhaps an inch, if the letter is small, farther above if the letter is large. On pillowcases the letter has the same position it has on the towels.

If the towels and pillowcases are scalloped and embroidered at the ends the letter is generally in a wreath or festoon of the border embroidery. Sheets should be marked an inch or so from the hem in the center. If they are marked on the corners the letter or letters do not show when the sheets are in use.

Marking Napkins.

Napkins are marked with the letter placed diagonally so that it will be in the center of the square of the folded napkin. Tablecloths are marked so that the letter rests on the table near the edge.

Ink marking, of course, should be as inconspicuous as embroidered marking is conspicuous. Tablecloths and napkins should be marked on the wrong side. The lettering can be done on strips of narrow linen tape, which should then be neatly sewed on. Sheets are marked in the corner, on the hem, and pillowcases are marked on the wrong side of the hem. Towels are also marked on the wrong side.

A Stencil Marker.

Some persons have copper stencil plates made for marking linen. These plates, of course, can be made in any design, and they are quite the easiest device for linen marking.

Indelible ink for marking may be made at home. Dissolve two parts of nitrate of silver in five parts of liquid ammonia and dissolve two and a half parts of gum arabic and three parts of carbonate of soda crystals in four parts of distilled water. When these ingredients are dissolved mix them together. Warm the mixture slightly, and it will turn brown. If a decidedly colored ink is wanted add a few drops of solution of magenta.

Seeking the Lost.

"What is that poet gabbling about?" "His lost Lenore."

"He'd better put an ad. in the lost column. By the way, what is a le-nore?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Hard work is still the road to prosperity, and there is no other.—Benjamin Franklin.

with any color scheme. They are quite expensive when made by an upholsterer or bought from a decorator, but any woman who is clever with her needle could make one.

Dainty dimity bed covers are also shown, either in plain white or cream or with narrow stripes in color. They are made long enough, to tuck under the roll. Occasionally one sees separate slips, into which a round bolster may be slipped. The covers hang down the sides of brass beds, nearly touching the floor, the two sides at the bottom being split to allow the corners to lie flat.

With very sheer material a deep flounce sometimes appears. On wooden beds the cover merely touches the wooden sides. When a roll or bolster is used, slipping pillows are tucked away out of sight during the day and are only placed upon the bed at night.

It is almost a necessity to have a couch in one's bedroom, for a bed to remain immaculate should never be used for lounging or resting on during the day. No guest room should be without such a convenience.

A Season of Colors.

You can buy wigs dyed to match any sample of material you may take to the dyer and wig seller. You may buy stockings dyed within twenty-four hours to match exactly a frock or slippers of a most unearthly hue. And now you can have smelling salts made to match any samples you take to the chemist who puts up smelling salts. They may be colored yellow to match the odd shade of the hangings in your bedroom or boudoir, or a strange shade of lavender to match your Japanese crape negligee, or a queer green to match one of the new shades you have chosen for your summer suit.

Plant Lavender Seeds.

Those who like sachets of dried lavender in their linen closets and bureau drawers may raise all of the delicate flowers they can use by planting the seeds in a shallow box filled with finely sifted soil. When the tiny plants are a few inches high transplant them in small flowerpots and when the ground is warm set them out of doors. Two or three plants will yield all the lavender one will be likely to use.

"Bob" and "Cob" In Money.

Most people would know what was meant by the term "bob" when speaking of money. But would they be able to say offhand what a "cob" is or was in a similar connection? It was used in polite circles in the seventeenth century, for it occurs in a letter from the Earl of Essex—"So my wife gave her a cob, for which she seemed very thankful"—printed in the new volume of the "Camden" series, the editor of which gives the information that the cob was "a piece of money the value of which varied from 4 shillings to as much as 6 shillings in 1675."—London Chronicle.

No Chance to Elope.

DEATH OF MRS. R. M. BRISCO.

Highly Esteemed Chatham Lady Passes to Great Beyond.

Mrs. Mary Ester Brisco, relict of the late R. M. Brisco, of Napanee, passed peacefully away at her home in Chatham after an illness extending over a month. The late Mrs. Brisco had many friends in the city who while they have known of her serious condition, and the slight hopes entertained for her recovery, will be shocked to learn of her demise. Her illness puzzled the physicians, and it could not be determined what the sickness was. It is thought that she suffered from a complication of diseases. At the last, however, she suffered very little pain, and the end came very peacefully. A week ago Mrs. Brisco underwent an operation in Toronto, in the hope that it would cure her, but while the operation was successful, it could not overcome the inevitable and death followed.

The late Mrs. Brisco was 59 years of age and was born in Lennox county. Her maiden name was Mary Ester Ham. She lived in Napanee until the death of her husband which occurred eight years ago, when she moved to Chatham where she has resided ever since.

Deceased is survived by a family of one daughter and six sons who were all at her bedside when the end came. They are Miss Nellie Brisco, of Chatham, Dr. N. A., of New York, Fred H., of Chatham, Ira B., of Winnipeg, Roy M., of Blairmore, Alberta, Ernest, and Dr. Clarence also of Chatham.

The funeral was held from the Brisco Apartments, King street, to Christ Church and thence to the Maple Leaf cemetery.

The remains were borne to their last resting place by her six sons, Tr. N. A., Fred H., Ernest C., Ira B., Roy M., and Dr. Clarence.

The body was removed from her late residence, Brisco apartments, to Christ Church, where the funeral service was conducted by Rev. R. S. W. Howard, the rector.

There was a large representation of city business men, the Mayor and representatives from the city council and the heads of the various city and county departments.

The casket was covered with flowers from the family and friends of the deceased lady including a large and beautiful floral emblem from the members of the city council.

PRESBYTERIAL MEETING IN NAPANEE—KINGSTON DISTRICT.

"God keepeth His eye even on the sparrow." That He has blessed the Woman's Missionary Societies is certain, judging from some of the reports heard from the many delegates to the 28th annual Presbyterial of Kingston Presbytery, convened in Napanee, Wednesday and Thursday of last week.

During three of the sessions, Mrs. S. Russel, of Belleville, the President, ably conducted the meetings. The local auxiliary of which Mrs. Pringle is president was highly congratulated and thanked for the excellent hospitality given. Napanee Presbyterians

THE GRAHAM CO'Y.

Napanee, Ont.

...and from the many delegates to the 28th annual Presbyterian of Kingston Presbytery, convened in Napanee, Wednesday and Thursday of last week.

During three of the sessions, Mrs.
S. Russel, of Belleville, the Presidently conducted the meetings. The local auxiliary of which Mrs. Pringle is president was highly congratulated and thanked for the excellent hospitality given. Napanee Presbyterians and townfolk cannot but help profit from the atmosphere created by the Presbyterial.

The writer appreciated thoroughly all the meetings. But some features and addresses stood out distinctively.
Mrs. Graham's account of the annual meeting and amalgamation meeting in Toronto was so much above the ordinary report that it aroused much commendation.

Mrs. Carr Harris' address on "Intercessory Missionaries" was a new note in the missionary home work; and her recollections of definite answers to prayers was very convincing that intercession is a very effective factor in the work. Miss Clearhue, a returned missionary from our own Canadian territory of Central India, gave the address at the public meeting. She speaks with great hope for India, one of the hardest fields of the Orient.
